element of the prayer of plaintiff is that he be put in possession, and maintained there, and that a future time be fixed in which plaintiff shall state any balance then due on an accounting after possession given; and this proposition was urged both in the briefs and at the argument. We think it untenable for two reasons: First, the act required of the court comprehends an order continuous in its nature, requiring protracted supervision and direction, with the exercise of special knowledge, skill, or judgment in the oversight, to determine whether the mine is being operated under the conditions of the contract, and will not be specifically enforced. Pom. Cont. (2d Ed.) § 312; Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 358, 19 L. Ed. 955; Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 367; Mastin v. Halley, 61 Mo. 196." In Mastin v. Halley the court refused to specifically enforce a contract to convey because the consideration of the contract was the plaintiff's undertaking to erect a certain building on the land, which could not have been specifically enforced against the plaintiff; the court saying, "A court of equity will not enforce building contracts." In Latin v. Hazard, 91 Cal. 87, 27 Pac. 515, this court held that the remedy of specific performance did not lie in favor of plaintiff, because it could not have been invoked in favor of defendant on account of the nature of the latter's obligations. The court said: "The agreement that McLoughlin will operate the road for the stipulated period in the mode agreed upon is a substantial and important part of the obligation, which has not been performed, and of which specific performance cannot be enforced by a decree." It is evident that the contract here involved is, on the part of appellant, within the principle above stated. A decree that appellant "be let into possession of said premises for the purpose of performing the labor provided for in the contract, and for the erection of said ten-stamp quartz mill, and to otherwise perform," etc., would be only the beginning of the court's work. It would have to be followed by numerous and repeated supervisions and investigations and additional decrees and orders, all requiring judgment and skill in a special business. It would have to be determined afterwards what would constitute "opening and developing" the property; on what part of the numerous mines the developing should be attempted; whether the work in developing was done properly, and in good faith; and whether it was done in such manner as would reasonably tend to so prospect the ground as to show whether or not it contained valuable ore, and to put it in such condition as to be worked to advantage if such ore should be discovered. The same supervision would be necessary over the building of the mill,—where it should be located; whether, if erected, it would be "modern in every particular"; and whether, if the stamps should be less than 700 pounds, it would still be "the equivalent, as may be found the most desirous to work the ore." And then within what time must the developing be done and the mill be built? All this—to say nothing of the tangled provisions about stocks of corporations "nonassessable"—clearly brings the case within that class with respect to which courts will not undertake to frame decrees for specific performance. Moreover, Burcham is a tenant in common of the whole property, holding an undivided one-third of every part and parcel of it, seised per my et per tout; and, as he did not execute the contract, and is not a party to the action, how can it be decreed that appellant be let into possession and allowed to use the property in the manner asked by him, when the court has no control over Burcham or his interest? This was one of the points considered in Cooper v. Pena, for the court there say: "It is proper to remark that there is no assurance that the offer could be carried out, for there is a third person to be consulted, who might refuse to act in the matter, or might not agree to a satisfactory partition." Appellant has cited a few cases tending somewhat to the point that appellant's obligation could have been specifically performed, but they are mostly railroad cases, where, in order to protect various interests of great magnitude, courts have undertaken to temporarily operate railroads through receivers, and in a few instances have ordered railroads to be completed. They are exceptional cases, and do not disturb the general rule as hereinbefore stated. Our conclusion is that the court below properly sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment for defendants, and that appellant, if he have any cause of action growing out of the contract, must be left to the remedy of a suit at law for damages. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment of affirmance, but upon grounds to a great extent distinct from those stated in the opinion of Justice McFARLAND. It is conceded that a contract will not be specifically enforced unless the remedy is mutual. It is also conceded that the contract here in question does not, by its terms, bind the plaintiff to do anything, and that to impart to it the element of mutuality the plaintiff must have made a binding offer to perform on his part, and this offer must have been free from any conditions which the defendants on their part were not bound to perform. Civ. Code, § 1494. It does not appear that any such offer to perform has ever been made by the plaintiff at any time, and certainly he does not make it by his complaint. He alleges, it is true, "that immediately after the execution of said contract plaintiff notified defendants that he elected to perform his part of said contract, and to thereby acquire the undivided one-half interest in and to said mining claims as in said contract mentioned, and then and there proceeded to, and did thereafter, expend the sum of about two thousand dollars, hereinbefore mentioned, in pursuance of said contract." But this allegation is to be construed in connection with other parts of the complaint, which show that, according to plaintiff's construction of the contract, he was to become the owner of a half interest in the mines as soon as he had expended $10,000 in their development and erected a 10-stamp mill. All, therefore, that he ever offered to do at any time, so far as can be gathered from the complaint, was to expend $10,000 and build a mill upon condition that he should thereupon become the owner and have a conveyance of a one-half interest in the property. And that, indeed, is the condition upon which he offers to perform in the complaint filed herein, the prayer of which reads as follows: "That plaintiff be let into possession of the said premises for the purpose of performing the labor provided for in said contract, and for the erection of said ten-stamp quartz mill, and to otherwise perform and carry out the covenants of said contract, and that said defendants, their servants, agents, and employes, be restrained by this court from interfering with the work of plaintiff upon said mining claims, and that upon the completion of said labor and the expenditure of said money and the erection of said ten-stamp quartz mill that plaintiff be decreed to be the owner of one-half interest in and to the premises set forth in the complaint, and that the defendants cause to be executed and delivered to plaintiff herein a good and sufficient deed conveying to said plaintiff an undivided one-half interest in and to said premises." But the contract, which is annexed to the complaint as an exhibit, does not bear the construction which the plaintiff has placed upon it. The terms of this instrument are so obscure and ambiguous that no one can assert with much confidence that he has discovered the real and exact intention of the parties; but I think Justice Harrison, in his opinion delivered in department (54 Pac. 587), correctly held that the plaintiff, by expending $10,000 and building a mill, would only have secured an option to purchase a half interest for $500,000. Plaintiff, therefore, has never offered to perform the contract according to its true construction, and subject to its stipulated conditions, but only according to his erroneous construction, and subject to conditions which he had no right to impose; and, such being the case, it cannot be said that the remedy of specific performance ever became mutual.

Another ground of my concurrence is that the defendants Singleton and Mooers never agreed to do what the court is asked to compel them to do, and what the plaintiff makes another condition of his offer to perform. They never agreed to convey to plaintiff a half interest in the mines out of their two-thirds. They merely executed for themselves a contract which, if it had been completed, would have bound them, in conjunction with their co-tenant, Burcham, to convey a half interest in the whole; in other words, each of the defendants was a part with one-sixth, and not with the one-fourth, which the plaintiff demands. The failure of Burcham to execute the contract left it incomplete, and the defect is not cured by the fact that defendants represented that they had authority to act for him. Whatever authority to act for Burcham they may have had or claimed, it is very certain that they neither acted nor pretended to act for him in the only way they could have done so effectively; i. e. by executing the contract in his name, and as his attorneys in fact. If plaintiff was relying upon their asserted authority to act for Burcham, why did he not require them to execute the contract in Burcham's behalf? If he had done so, Burcham would have been bound, if they had authority, and, if they did not have authority, they themselves would have been bound to perform what they had promised in his name. But in the incomplete condition in which the contract was delivered (assuming that the complaint shows it was delivered), neither defendants nor Burcham were bound to convey the one-sixth interest which, upon a fair construction of the written terms, was to be contributed from Burcham's third. Plaintiff nevertheless offers to perform only upon condition that he shall become the owner of that sixth interest, and that it be transferred to him by parties who never contracted to transfer it.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 27, 1899.)

ATTACHMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—CONFLICT IN EVIDENCE—REPLEVIN—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Evidence to impeach an affidavit of attachment is not admissible in a collateral proceeding by a stranger to the attachment suit to recover possession of the property.

2. Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the finding of the trial court will not be disturbed.

3. Defendant seized in attachment certain stock which plaintiff claimed to have purchased from the defendant in attachment. Plaintiff's statement that he purchased the stock, and had been in continued possession for some years prior to the attachment, was uncontradicted. Held, he was entitled to recover such stock although Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by A. C. Hillman against C. W. Griffin. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Robert T. and William H. Devlin and F. E. Baker, for appellant. C. W. Thomas, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is in the nature of replevin. The plaintiff claims the property through purchase from Mrs. Emma H. Briggs, owner of the Glorietta Vineyard ranch in Yolo county. It consists of a large quantity of boxes and trays used on a fruit ranch, together with the tools and implements of various kinds necessary for the cultivation of such ranch, all embraced in the bill of sale dated the 12th of January, 1895, for the consideration, as stated by the plaintiff, of $6,000; also two mules and one mare, of the value of $500, not embraced in said bill of sale, but purchased by the plaintiff from the said Mrs. Briggs in 1893. The defendant justifies the taking of the property in question as sheriff of Yolo county under proceedings in attachment in the suit of the West Valley Lumber Company, a corporation, against said Emma H. Briggs. The property, at the time of the seizure and taking by the defendant as sheriff, was on the said Glorietta Vineyard ranch. The affidavit in the attachment proceedings states that the action is brought upon a certain promissory note for the principal sum of $3,160, dated June 30, 1893, due eight months after date, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from date until paid; "that the same has been and is secured by a mortgage on real property, as appears of record in the records of Yolo county, California, in book 37, at page 626; that since the making and delivery of said mortgage, without any act of plaintiff, such security has become and is valueless." The defendant in said action, Mrs. Emma H. Briggs, appeared in the action, but raised no objection to the attachment proceedings. In rebuttal the plaintiff offered to prove the value of the Glorietta Vineyard ranch, the property covered by the mortgage to the West Valley Lumber Company, and that it had not decreased, but had increased, in value, and was worth more than the prior incumbrance thereon, and had not become valueless since the mortgage to the said West Valley Lumber Company, as stated in said affidavit. The court sustained an objection to this offered testimony, and this ruling of the court is assigned as one of the errors on the part of plaintiff, and pressed with considerable vigor. The plaintiff was not a party to the attachment suit, and the offered testimony is in the nature of a collateral attack by a stranger to the proceeding. In Shea v. Johnson, 101 Cal. 457, 35 Pac. 1023, the contest was between a junior and prior attachment, and it was sought, as in this case, to attack the prior attachment collaterally, and the court said: "The general rule is that, where the claim of the prior attaching creditor is for a bona fide debt without tinge of fraud, such an objection to the attachment proceedings as that insisted on in the case at bar can be successfully made only by the defendant in the attachment suit;" citing Fridenberg v. Pierson, 18 Cal. 152; Patrick v. Montader, 13 Cal. 435; Harvey v. Foster, 64 Cal. 296, 30 Pac. 849; Scrivener v. Dietz, 68 Cal. 1, 8 Pac. 609; Drake, Attachm. § 771. In Scrivener v. Dietz, referred to, as in this case, it was sought to impeach the affidavit in the attachment proceeding, and the court say: "Admittedly, this irregularity in the affidavit constituted good ground for a motion by the attachment debtor to dissolve the attachment; and, if such a motion had been made by him to the court in which the action was pending, it would have been the duty of the court to have dissolved the attachment. * * * But neither the regularity of the affidavit nor the validity of the attachment issued upon it was questioned by the debtor. He therefore waived whatever irregularities existed in either, and as against him, at least, the attachment was valid and operative; so that its execution according to law operated to create a provisional lien upon the property on which it was levied in favor of the attaching creditors. * * * The attachment proceedings are not attackable collaterally for an infirmity in the affidavit,"—citing authorities. "Notwithstanding the infirmity, the judgment was not void; it was only voidable at the instance of the attachment defendant, and could not be assailed collaterally by a stranger." The court below, therefore, in excluding the offered testimony, is sustained by authority. The same rule holds in regard to plaintiff's objection to the undertaking in attachment. One of the issues tried in the action was as to the delivery of the property sold by Mrs. Briggs to the plaintiff, mentioned in the bill of sale, and on this issue the court finds as follows: "That on the — day of January, 1895, the said Emma H. Briggs made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff herein a bill of sale of the property herein, and that on the 8th day of February, 1895, at the date of the levy of said writ of attachment and the date of the taking and seizure of said property by the defendant herein, the said Emma H. Briggs had not delivered the possession of said property to the plaintiff herein; that at said date last aforesaid the property was in the possession of Emma H. Briggs; that the transfer of said personal property from said Emma H. Briggs to the plaintiff herein (she at the time having possession and control of said property) was not accompanied by immediate delivery, and was not followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the property so transferred, the property in question; that said transfer and bill of sale were fraudulent and void against the said West Valley Lumber Company, it being a creditor of said Emma H. Briggs while she was in the possession of said property." The most that can be said in favor of the contention of the plaintiff that this finding is not supported by the evidence is that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence in reference to the delivery and continued change of possession of the property mentioned, and, that being the case, the finding must be allowed to stand. But, in addition to the property mentioned in the bill of sale, and referred to by the court in its finding, the sheriff seized at the same time, as already stated, two mules and one dark brown mare, of the value, as found by the court, of $500. The testimony of plaintiff shows that these two mules and mare were purchased at Davisville in 1893, and brought by him to the Glorietta vineyard, which is about 10 miles from where they were purchased; and he testifies that they had been in his possession since their purchase in 1893, except for a short time, when he sold them to a Mr. Maxwell, who did not come up to the terms of sale, and returned them to the plaintiff. There is no evidence in the record in conflict with or contradicting the testimony of the plaintiff in this respect, and his testimony is corroborated by the bill of sale, which is set out in the record, and which does not contain these mules and mare, but does enumerate specifically all the other articles seized excepting them. The finding, therefore, that these articles had not been delivered at the time of sale, and that the possession had not continued in the plaintiff, is entirely unsupported by the evidence. They were purchased by the plaintiff, if not before the date of the note on which the attachment proceedings were had, at any rate long before the said note matured, and there is nothing to show that their sale and transfer was not founded upon a valuable consideration, and made in good faith; and the mere fact that they happened to be at the time of the seizure upon the Glorietta Vineyard ranch does not alter the case. Much other property might have been on that ranch, belonging to various parties entirely unconnected with Mrs. Briggs, at the time of the attachment proceedings. The judgment is reversed, and the superior court is directed to correct its findings according to the evidence at the trial as herein pointed out, so that it will appear therefrom that the above-named mules and horse were not the property of Emma H. Briggs at the time they were taken by the defendant, or subject to seizure on such writ of attachment then held by the defendant; and thereupon to enter judgment in accordance with the findings as so modified and corrected. The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

ELECTION—MARKING BALLOT FOR IDENTIFICATION.

Under Pol. Code, § 1211, providing that, if a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office, his ballot shall not be counted for such office; and section 1215, providing that no voter shall place any mark on his ballot by which it may afterwards be identified as the one voted by him,—a ballot, whereon a voter has marked more names for a certain office than there are persons to be elected to that office, cannot be rejected, except as to such office, as being a ballot marked for identification.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yuba county.

Election contest by Fred H. Day against S. O. Gunning. From the action of the trial court in rejecting certain ballots which defendant claimed had been voted for him, he appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Carlin and J. E. Ebert, for appellant. W. T. Phipps, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This appeal presents an election contest for the office of auditor and recorder of Yuba county. The consideration of a single question disposes of the merits of the litigation. The trial court rejected 13 ballots which had been voted for this appellant, upon the ground that they contained a mark which identified them. The face of these ballots disclosed that the voter had marked more names for a certain office than there were persons to be elected to that office, and this act of the voter was held to be a mark of identification. For illustration: In the city and county of San Francisco, 18 supervisors are elected. If the elector should vote for 19, the entire ballot should be rejected as containing an identifying mark. This contention of respondent, which was sustained by the trial court, cannot be approved, and a citation of the statutes of this state demonstrates its unsoundness to a certainty. Section 1215 of the Political Code, among other matters, declares, "No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may afterwards be identified as the one voted by him." Section 1211 of the same Code also declares, "If a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office * * * his ballot shall not be counted for such office." It may be conceded that a vote for 19 supervisors, when there are but 18 to be elected, would be one way of identifying the ballot; but it would no more identify the ballot than if the voter had voted for 17 supervisors. Yet clearly such action of the voter would not justify a rejection of the ballot. It is thus apparent that any and every mark upon a ballot which might possibly be used as an identification does not necessarily demand that the ballot be rejected; and, when we read said section 1211, it is plain that the marks here involved do not come within the prohibition of section 1215.

These two sections are not necessarily in conflict. Force and effect may be given to both, and under such conditions force and effect must be given to both. If the marks upon these ballots in any sense may be said to be identifying marks, then they are relieved from the force and effect of section 1215 by virtue of the provisions of section 1211. Section 1215 is general in its nature, and covers a broad field. Section 1211 is special in its nature, and directed to a single object and purpose. It is essentially a limitation upon section 1215, and must be held controlling. Section 1211, by all rules of construction, is susceptible of but a single meaning. It means that the ballot must be rejected, as to the particular office, where more than the number of names allowed by law are voted for that office, and that it must be counted as to all other names for all other offices. This is as plain as though it were declared in direct and positive language. The statute means this, or it means nothing. Any other construction would involve a contradiction, even an absurdity. If these crosses constitute an identifying mark forbidden by the statute, then the ballot could not be counted for any office by virtue of section 1215; and it was idle and absurd legislation to enact section 1211, declaring that such a ballot should not be counted for any person for that particular office. Counsel for respondent declares the portion of section 1211 here involved to be inadvertent legislation. The soundness of this claim is not made plain to us, but, however that may be, if there was inadvertent legislation it is inadvertence that may only be effectively cured by the lawmaking body of the state. Various cases from other states are cited by both parties to this appeal which bear upon the question here under consideration. It is unnecessary to review those authorities. Our statute is succinct and controlling, and, tested by its provisions, these 13 ballots should have been counted for appellant. Respondent was declared elected by a plurality of 9 votes. The conclusion arrived at demands a reversal of the judgment. For the foregoing reasons, it is so ordered.

RICHARDSON v. DISS. (L. A. 584.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 25, 1899.)
CLAIM AGAINST SOLVENT ESTATE—INTEREST
AFTER ALLOWANCE.

In the absence of a statute directing the interest rate which a claim against a solvent estate shall carry after allowance and before payment, as is provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, as to claims against insolvent estates, such a claim should draw the contract rate until paid.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Proceeding by Charles W. Richardson, as claimant against an estate, against J. W. F.

Diss, as clerk of the superior court, to determine the rate of interest which his claim should carry after allowance. There was a judgment in favor of claimant, and the clerk appeals. Affirmed.

J. P. Hight and Chas. L. Allison, for appellant. Curtis & Curtis, for respondent.

GRAY, C. The record in this case presents the single question, what rate of interest should an allowed claim, based on a promissory note, against a solvent estate of a deceased person, bear? On the part of appellant, it is contended that the claim, after allowance, should bear the legal rate of 7 per cent.; and on the part of respondent it is claimed that the agreement as to interest contained in the contract upon which the claim is based is the measure of the rate of interest as well after the claim is allowed as before. The learned judge of the trial court adopted the latter theory, and decided that the claim, after allowance, should draw the contract rate of interest, which in this case was 15 per cent. per annum, compounded quarterly. We think this decision correct. Section 1920 of the Civil Code provides that "interest is payable on judgments recovered in the courts of this state at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, and no greater rate, but such interest must not be compounded in any manner or form." Section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as to estates of deceased persons: "If the estate be insolvent, no greater rate of interest shall be allowed upon any claim after the first publication of notice to creditors than is allowed on judgments obtained in the superior court." There is no statutory or Code provision cited in the briefs herein fixing any rate of interest on claims against a solvent estate, and we infer that no such provision exists. Appellant claims that the headnote to section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., quoted as follows, "Claims to be sworn to, and, when allowed, to bear same interest as judgments," constitutes such provision; but the headnote of a section of the Code should not be treated as an enactment of law, standing by itself, but should be read and construed in its contextual relation to the whole section of which it is a part. Thus read and construed, it is obvious that the legislature intended by the said section to provide for a rate of interest only as to claims against insolvent estates. Before the enactment of any law reducing the interest on judgments from the contract rate to the legal rate, all judgments based on contracts which provided for interest in excess of the legal rate continued to draw interest at the rate agreed upon in such contracts. Corcoran v. Doll, 32 Cal. 82. It would seem, also, that prior to the adoption of section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., all allowed claims against estates of deceased persons, whether such estates were insolvent or not, bore interest at the contract rate when the contracts upon which they were based provided for a rate of interest in excess of the legal rate. In re Den's Estate, 35 Cal. 692. Upon this we argue that, it being necessary to pass statutes to reduce the interest on judgments and on claims against insolvent estates, in the absence of any statute directed to the same purpose in reference to claims against solvent estates, such claims must still be held to bear interest, up to the time of their payment, at the contract rate. Indeed, the whole course of legislation on the subject of interest would seem to show that such was the intention of the legislature. Section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., in specially mentioning insolvent estates as subjects for reduction of interest, ex industria excludes all estates not mentioned from the operation of this law reducing interest, and shows, as plainly as anything short of positive enactment can show, that it was the intention and purpose of the legislature that claims against solvent estates should continue, after allowance, to draw interest at any rate in excess of the legal rate that the contracts upon which they were based would warrant. Such seems, also, to be the construction placed upon the law by the bench and bar of the state since the enactment of the Code referred to herein; for we find in Bank v. Hayes, 112 Cal. 75, 44 Pac. 469, and in Finger v. McCaughey, 114 Cal. 64, 45 Pac. 1004, that the contracts therein controlled the rate of interest the claims bore after allowance. It is true there is no discussion found in these cases of the question as to what the rate of interest should be. Indeed, all parties and the court seem to have coincided in the same rule of interest adopted by the trial court in the case at bar as being the only rule to be deduced from the Code provisions on the subject, and therefore requiring no discussion. We have found no decision conflicting with this rule. For the foregoing reasons, we advise that the judgment and order of the court below be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BRINGHAM v. KNOX et al. (Sac. 531.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 23, 1899.)

MECHANIC'S LIEN—RAILROADS—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY AFFECTED—FILING—EVIDENCE—PLEADING.

1. A demand, at the conclusion of a claim for a lien for material furnished, "that the claimant have the benefit of the law allowing the lien," is equivalent to a statement that he claims a lien on the property in question.

2. A lien claim, stating that the materials were furnished in the construction "of that certain railway known as and called S. V. & M. Ry.," and further describing such road as commencing at a certain point, and continuing "to its present westerly terminus, distant about 900 feet from the K. M.," is sufficient, under Code Civ.

Proc. § 1183, which provides for a lien in general against the entire road, although the company at the time owned the roadbed, and shortly afterwards shifted its terminus further west, since it is a fair inference that the further particulars set forth in the claim were intended as particulars for the identification of the road as an entirety, and not as exclusive of the westward extension, then incomplete.

3. Where a railroad lies in two counties, the filing of a mechanic's lien against it in one county only is sufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, which provides for record in "the county in which such property, or some part thereof, is situated."

4. Where materials are furnished at an agreed price, such price is prima facie evidence of their value.

5. A complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien which alleges the furnishing of materials at an agreed price is sufficient, prima facie, as alleging the value thereof.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Plumas county.

Action by M. C. Bringham against H. L. W. Knox, the Sierra Valleys Railway Company, and others. From a judgment in favor of the Sierra Valleys Railway Company and others, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. G. Clough, for appellant. Goodwin & Webb, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. One H. C. Bowen was the owner of certain narrow-gauge railway property called the Sierra Valleys & Mohawk Railroad, which in different parts of the line was in various stages of advancement. The section on which rails had been laid began at the eastern terminus of the line, a place called "Junction," in Lassen county, and extended thence northwest and westerly a distance of 14 miles. The roadbed had been graded something more than 16 miles beyond the end of the laid track, and the right of way for the road had been obtained a few miles yet further to the westerly terminus, at Mohawk Valley, in Plumas county; the total distance from said Junction to Mohawk Valley being about 35 miles. In October, 1894, the defendant H. L. W. Knox agreed in writing with said Bowen to construct additional track on said line, commencing at the end of the 14 miles already laid, and proceeding westward about 9 miles to Rock Quarry, a point a few hundred feet west of a place called "Kerby Mill." This contract was not, nor was any memorandum thereof, filed in the office of the recorder of either of said counties, so that it was void, under the provisions of section 1183, Code Civ. Proc. Nevertheless Knox proceeded thereunder, and completed his work in accordance therewith on August 8, 1895. The plaintiff in this action, M. C. Bringham, furnished 17,000 timber ties to said Knox for use, and which Knox did use, in the construction of said extension of the track to Rock Quarry. Knox agreed to pay plaintiff 18 cents apiece for said ties, and yet owes him on account thereof a balance of $1,835. On September 6, 1895, plaintiff filed in the office of the recorder of Plumas county his claim of lien, presently to be described, for the amount of said balance.

This is an action to recover said amount and enforce such lien. The court below rendered judgment against Knox, who had made default, for the money due plaintiff, but refused to enforce the asserted lien. From the judgment in favor of the defendants other than Knox, plaintiff has appealed.

1. Respondents contend that plaintiff has sought to enforce his lien against a part only of a continuous railroad, whereas the law required him to proceed against the whole property; and this is the question mainly discussed by counsel. Pending performance of Knox's contract with Bowen, and before plaintiff filed his claim of lien, the title to the entire line of track, roadbed, and rights of way from Junction to Mohawk Valley had passed from said Bowen to the defendant Sierra Valleys Railway Company. In his claim of lien filed as aforesaid on September 6, 1895, Bringham stated that he "furnished materials actually used in the construction of that certain railway known as and called the Sierra Valleys & Mohawk Railway, and also such other property than the railroad as may be necessary for the operation and use of said railroad, which railroad is described as follows, to wit"; setting out a particular description, commencing at Junction, and continuing to the town of Beckwith, from which point it is stated that the road "bears about due west to Kerby Mill, and to its present westerly terminus, distant about nine hundred feet from Kerby Mill; that the entire distance from the point called 'Junction' to the present westerly terminus of said Sierra Valleys & Mohawk Railroad is about twenty-three and one-half miles; * * * that not less than twenty-five feet of ground on each side of said railroad, as constructed, is necessary for the use and operation of said road, together with the ground on which all freight and other houses are situated." The instrument concluded with a statement that Bringham claims the benefit of the law relative to liens of mechanics and others upon real property. At the time the claim was filed, work was in progress for the completion of the track on a section of the road extending seven miles west from Rock Quarry, and the same was completed on November 15, 1895, since which time the Sierra Valleys Railway Company has operated the same as part of the continuous line westward from Junction. The allegations of the complaint in the action, considered together, show that plaintiff proceeds for the foreclosure of his lien upon whatever property is described in the said claim. It seems to be well settled that the proper construction of the statute allowing to material men and others a lien for materials or labor furnished for use in the construction of a railroad (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183) requires that the lien must, in general, be claimed and enforced against the entire road. Cox v. Railroad Co., 44 Cal. 18; Boisot, Mech. Liens, § 190, and cases cited. In our opinion, the plaintiff here has brought his case within the rule. He distinctly stated in his filed claim that he furnished materials used in the construction, not of a part or section of the railroad, but "of that certain railway known as and called the Sierra Valleys & Mohawk Railway." It is true, he further says that the said railroad is described as commencing at Junction, and continuing to its present westerly terminus, about 900 feet from Kerby Mill; but it is to be noted that he says its present westerly terminus is at that point, carrying the implication that the railroad was projected beyond such point, and might be extended. The terminus of the road as an actual railroad—a way for traffic—was at the place stated in his claim. Work was then in progress for its extension, and in the course of a few weeks the terminus was shifted 7 miles further westward. In view of the statement that the materials were actually used in the construction of a certain railway, correctly described by name, it is a fair inference that the further particulars given in the claim of lien were intended by the claimant, and should be regarded, merely as particulars for the identification of the road as an entirety, and not as exclusive of the westward extension, then incomplete. Such extension, although not within the descriptive particulars, yet was not excluded by them, and was within the descriptive designation, "Sierra Valleys & Mohawk Railway." The statement that 25 feet of ground "on each side of said railroad, as constructed, is necessary for the use and operation of the road," applies as well to future construction as to the part then complete. No ground on each side could become necessary for operation of the railroad, except as the same should be put in condition to be operated. The demand with which the claim of lien concluded, that the claimant have the benefit of the law allowing the lien, was equivalent to a statement that he claimed a lien on the property he had described. Mill Co. v. Garrettsen, 87 Cal. 589, 25 Pac. 747. And, for the reasons indicated, we think it would be hypercriticism to say that he described less than the whole line for the purposes of his lien. See Tredinnick v. Mining Co., 72 Cal. 78, 13 Pac. 152; Mills Co. v. Kremer, 94 Cal. 205, 29 Pac. 633.

2. Respondents also object that, since the road lies in the two counties of Plumas and Lassen, the claim of lien was void, because filed in the office of the recorder of Plumas county only. As to this, it is sufficient to say that the statute requires the party claiming the lien to file his claim "for record with the county recorder of the county in which such property, or some part thereof, is situated." Code Civ. Proc. § 1187. The courts have no power to amend the statute by requiring the filing of the lien in every county where any part of the property is situated.

3. It is urged that since the contract between Knox and Bowen was void, and since for that reason the plaintiff could claim his lien only for the value of the materials furnished by him, and not for the contract price agreed on with Knox (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183), therefore both the claim of lien and the complaint are insufficient, in failing to allege the value of plaintiff's materials. It was, however, stated in the claim that the agreed price was 18 cents apiece for the ties. This statement was a sufficient showing, prima facie, of their value. Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 144, 150, 23 Pac. 139; Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 38, 23 Pac. 200, and 25 Pac. 1101; Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 286, 296, 43 Pac. 896. And so in relation to the complaint. It contained no direct averment of the value of the ties, but it was alleged that plaintiff furnished them to Knox at the said agreed price. Since the agreed price was prima facie evidence of their value, it must be held that the pleader in this manner alleged the value. Although he averred evidence of the fact, rather than the ultimate fact itself, yet, as the complaint was not demurred to for uncertainty in this particular, it is sufficient on appeal. Mill Co. v. Garretson, 87 Cal. 589, 25 Pac. 747; Amesoy v. Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 52, 50 Pac. 1066, and cases cited. It is said further that the value of the materials was not proved at the trial. But the said averments of the complaint were not denied by the answer of respondents. It was unnecessary, therefore, that plaintiff should make proof of them. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

SNIBLEY v. PALMTAG. (S. F. 1,902.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1899.)

ELECTION CONTEST—DEATH OF PARTY—ABATEMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1125, providing that, if an election contest proceeding be dismissed for want of prosecution, or if the election be affirmed, judgment must be rendered against the party contesting for costs, an election contest is not abated by the death of the contestant occurring after appeal by contestee from a judgment vacating the decision of the board of supervisors declaring contestee elected, but may be continued by contestants' personal representative.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county.

Election contest by Daniel Snibley against William Palmtag. From a judgment of the trial court setting aside the decision of the board of supervisors declaring defendant elected, he appealed. Subsequent to the appeal plaintiff died, and the defendant moved the appellate court to remand the case, with directions to vacate the judgment, and dismiss the action. Motion denied.

H. W. Scott and Briggs & Hudner, for appellant. A. M. Cunningham and L. W. Jefferson, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an election contest for the office of supervisor of San Benito county. Appellant was declared elected by the board of canvassers. Respondent, being the opposing candidate, contested the election under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, charging that illegal votes were counted for Palmtag, and that upon a proper count contestant would be found to have been elected. Upon the trial the court found that contestant and contestee had received the same number of legal votes, and ordered and adjudged that the alleged election of William Palmtag, "whose election to said office was so declared by the board of supervisors of San Benito county, state of California, on November 14, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, set aside, canceled, and annulled." Defendant appeals, and contends that, having found that there was a tie, and therefore that no other person had received a greater number of legal votes than the contestee, the election could not be annulled, but the contest should then be dismissed. But he also contends that the court committed errors in the count, and erroneously found that appellant did not receive the highest number of legal votes. After the appeal had been taken, the respondent died, and the contestee now asks the court to remand the case, with directions to the trial court to vacate the judgment and dismiss the action. He takes the ground that the action abated upon the death of contestant. The estate of deceased, he argues, cannot be interested in the action. It will not be benefited by any possible judgment, and is not an elector, and the legal representative may not be such. The statute does not provide for the contingency of the death of the contestant, and no one can be substituted in his place. The contest is a special statutory proceeding, and it often happens in such cases that the legislature has failed to anticipate and provide for all possible contingencies. Any elector may inaugurate the contest, and, had Snibley not been the opposing candidate, the same difficulty would have existed. And the trouble would have been the same if the court had found that Snibley had received a majority of the legal votes, or if the finding had been in favor of the contestee, and he had died after judgment. In either case it seems very hard if the survivor, against whom the judgment has been rendered, cannot appeal from it. Were the cause of action one which would die with the person, still after judgment the action does not abate. It is then property, and goes to the estate of the successful party if he dies after judgment. The judgment may be attacked and set aside on appeal, but so long as it stands it is not affected by the death of either party. Atlantic Dock Co. v. Mayor, etc., of New York City, 53 N. Y. 64; Shafer v. Shafer, 30 Mich. 163; Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236. It is not correct to say that the estate of the deceased has no interest in the controversy. It is provided in section 1125 that, if the proceeding be dismissed for want of prosecution, or if the election be affirmed, "judgment must be rendered against the party contesting such election for costs." Having commenced the proceeding, and prosecuted it to judgment, by which the contestee is deprived of an office to which he had been declared elected, neither he nor his estate could escape the responsibility he has assumed. Appellant has a right to his appeal, and there is a chance that the judgment may be reversed, and that upon a retrial the election will be affirmed. The motion of the appellant is denied, but, upon causing the representative of the estate of Snibley to be substituted, the case will be heard.

HOLLENBEAK v. McCOY et al. (Sac. 292.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1899.)

JUDGMENT—ENFORCEMENT—INJUNCTION—APPEAL—LACHES.

1. Where judgment was wrongfully recovered against a party in an action for malicious prosecution, and he was informed, shortly after the trial, of all the grounds which he urged in an independent action to procure a decree to enjoin its enforcement, but failed to take an appeal within the time prescribed, he was not entitled to such injunction, since negligence to take an appeal within the time prescribed is not a ground for equitable interference.

2. Where a justice of the peace before whom an action for malicious prosecution was tried informed defendant, against whom judgment had been rendered, that the recovery was erroneous, and that he would grant a motion for a new trial, and the hearing of such motion was set by the justice for a day beyond the time allowed for an appeal from the judgment, and denied, defendant was not entitled to a decree enjoining the enforcement of such judgment because his right to appeal therefrom had been lost through reliance on the justice's promise, in the absence of proof that the plaintiff was a party to the promise or knew that it had been made.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county.

Injunction by one Hollenbeak against one McCoy and others to restrain the enforcement of a justice's judgment. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint and entering judgment against plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

Francis Carr, Clay W. Taylor, and J. Chadbourne, for appellant. F. P. Primm and Jas. T. Boyd, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff was sued by the defendant McCoy in the justice's court of Fall River township, county of Shasta, for having maliciously caused his arrest upon a criminal charge, and at the trial of the action a verdict and judgment thereon was rendered against him. A motion for a new trial in the justice's court was denied, and he then appealed from the judgment to the superior court, where his appeal was dismissed upon the ground that it was not taken within 30 days after the judgment was rendered. The present action was brought by him to procure a decree enjoining the enforcement of this judgment, and directing it to be canceled of record. In the title of the action he has named as defendants, in addition to the plaintiff in the original suit, "F. A. Moers, justice of the peace," and "O. W. Levens, constable"; but there are no allegations in the complaint with reference to either of these last defendants, nor is it alleged that Moers was the justice before whom the action was tried. The grounds upon which he seeks the relief are, in substance, that certain persons were improperly admitted as jurors to try the cause, and that their verdict was arrived at by chance, and in disregard of the evidence and the law applicable thereto. It is also alleged in the complaint that, after the entry of judgment, "the justice of the peace holding said court voluntarily informed him" that the verdict of the jury was against the law and evidence, and that, if he should move for a new trial of the action, he would grant the motion; and that, relying upon such information, he made such motion, and that the hearing thereof was set by the justice for a day beyond the time allowed by law for appeal from the judgment to the superior court, and was then denied; and that thereafter he took an appeal, which was dismissed upon the ground that it was not taken within the time allowed by law. To this complaint the defendants filed a general demurrer, which was sustained by the court, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed.

The complaint fails to show any ground for the interference of a court of equity to restrain the enforcement of the judgment rendered in the justice's court. It appears from the complaint that the plaintiff was informed of all the grounds which he urges in support of his action within a week after the verdict was given by the jury, and he then had a complete remedy against all the errors committed at the trial by an appeal to the superior court. His failure to take such appeal until more than 30 days after the rendition of the judgment was his own negligence, and cannot be invoked as a ground for the interference of equity. Quinn v. Wetherbee, 41 Cal. 247; Daly v. Pennie, 86 Cal. 552, 25 Pac. 67. "The correctness of a judgment cannot be reviewed in an independent action upon grounds which were available to the litigant in the original action." Johnson v. Reed (Cal.) 57 Pac. 680. Neither is the plaintiff entitled to relief by reason of his having relied upon the promise of the justice to grant him a new trial. He does not claim that the plaintiff in the action in that court was a party to this promise, or knew that it had been made. He was, moreover, bound to know that the time for an appeal from the judgment was not prolonged by any proceedings before the justice's court. The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. SPENCER et al.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—TITLE OF ACT—JUDICIAL POWER—INSECT PESTS—NUISANCES—STATUTES—POLICE POWER—PLEADING.

1. St. 1881, p. 88, as amended by St. 1889, p. 413, and St. 1891, pp. 260, 268, entitled "An act to protect and promote the horticultural interests of the state," and providing for the appointing of a horticultural commission, prescribing the terms of its members, defining their duties and powers, fixing their salaries, and making the expense of removing and abating insect pest nuisances a lien on the property on which the nuisance had existed, is not unconstitutional, as treating of more than one subject under a single title, since every provision therein points directly to the protection of the state horticultural interests, according to the title.

2. St. 1881, p. 88, amended by St. 1889, p. 413, and St. 1891, pp. 260, 268, declaring orchards and nurseries where certain pests exist to be nuisances, and providing for the appointing of a horticultural commission with power to abate or remove such nuisances, and making the expense of such abatement a lien on the land on which the nuisance had existed, is not unconstitutional, as being contrary to Const. art. 3, providing that the executive, judicial, and legislative functions of government shall be separate, since the commission's judicial power is the exercise of police power only, and liens created by it are enforceable only in a court of justice.

3. St. 1881, p. 88, amended by St. 1889, p. 413, and St. 1891, pp. 260, 268, declaring that places infested with pests injurious to fruits and plants are nuisances, and creating a commission with power to remove or abate them, and making the expense for such removal or abatement a lien on the property on which the nuisance had existed, is a proper exercise of the constitutional privilege given the legislature to subject private property to such reasonable restraint and burdens as will secure the general welfare, since the existence of the fruit industry depends upon the suppression of the pests named in the statute.

4. St. 1891, p. 268, providing that the expense of removing or abating nuisances therein named shall be a county charge, payable out of the general fund, and shall be made a lien on the property on which the nuisances had existed, and recoverable by an action against such property, is not a statute creating a lien for a delinquent tax, but for an indebtedness due the county, and hence the manner prescribed for its enforcement is valid.

5. In an action to subject property to a lien declared by a horticultural commissioner, an allegation that such commissioner "was duly appointed" is insufficient; it being necessary, under Code Civ. Proc. § 456, to state that the appointment was "duly given and made."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by Los Angeles county against W. D. Spencer and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants following an order sustaining a demurrer to an amended complaint without leave to further amend, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. A. Donnell and W. P. James, for appellant. Tanner & Taft, for respondents.

GRAY, C. The amended complaint purports to set out a cause of action to foreclose a lien for the expense of abating an insect pest nuisance in defendants' orchard. This lien is claimed to exist by virtue of an act entitled "An act to protect and promote the horticultural interests of the state," and acts amendatory thereof and additional thereto. The act in question may be found in St. 1881, p. 88, and the amendments and additions thereto in St. 1889, p. 413, and St. 1891, pp. 260, 268. In sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, the learned judge of the court below filed an opinion in which the principal reason assigned for the action of the court is that the act in question is unconstitutional, and this, also, is the main reason urged on this appeal in support of the judgment.

It is said, first, that the act embraces more than one subject grouped under one title. The act as amended provides for the appointment, by the board of supervisors of any county in the state to whom the required petition is presented, of a horticultural commission of not exceeding three members. It also prescribes the length of the terms of office of said commissioners, and the manner of filling vacancies therein. It then defines the duties and powers of the board of horticultural commissioners, fixes their compensation, and provides for their removal. It makes the expense of removing or abating an insect pest nuisance from any property infested thereby a lien upon the property or premises from which such nuisance has been abated. All the duties and powers conferred upon said board appertain to the abating of those insect pest nuisances which interfere with the business of horticulture. From this brief summary, it will be readily seen that every provision of the act points directly to the protection and promotion of the horticultural interests of the state, and hence all said provisions relate to but one subject, and may be properly grouped in one act, under the very appropriate title of "An act to protect and promote the horticultural interests of the state." This view seems to be supported by the following cases and the cases therein cited: Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251; Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383.

It is urged that the act in question is unconstitutional and invalid because it confers judicial powers upon the horticultural commissioners, contrary to article 3 of the state constitution; but we do not think that this contention can be maintained. This provision of the constitution must be understood as construed by judicial decisions, and with reference to the subject of police power. The act itself defines the nuisances to which it relates, and declares that "all places, orchards, nurseries," etc., infected with "scale insects, or codlin moth, or other pests injurious to fruit, plants," etc., are public nuisances. In determining whether any particular place is a nuisance, the commissioner, no doubt, exercises some discretion, which, in a strict sense, is in its nature judicial; but the executing of a police regulation quite often calls into action that kind of discretion. And yet the acts of a commissioner involved in this case are no more judicial than the acts of officers under many other laws and ordinances which have been held valid. Ordinances prohibiting the erection of wooden buildings within fire limits, except upon the order of fire commissioners; giving viticultural commissioners power to prohibit the importation of diseased vines; prohibiting the carrying on of a public laundry without a certificate of the health officer and of the board of fire wardens; prohibiting retail liquor business without permission of the board of police commissioners; giving to the superintendent of public streets the power to determine where, either on a public street or on private premises, any rubbish should be deposited; forbidding orations, harangues, etc., in a park without consent of the park commissioners, or upon other grounds except by permission of the city government committee; beating drums, etc., without permission of the president of the village; prohibiting manufacturers and others from ringing bells, etc., except at such times as the board of aldermen may designate; authorizing harbor masters to station vessels and to assign each its place; forbidding the keeping of swine without a permit from the board of health; and giving to boards of health, quarantine officers, and milk inspectors discretion as to the exercise of police powers,—all such laws and ordinances have been judicially held to be valid, although they confer the same power upon designated public officers as is given by the act here in question to the commissioners. Ex parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 402; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529, and cases there cited; Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 Pac. 310; Bittenhaus v. Johnston, 92 Wis. 588, 66 N. W. 805, 32 L. R. A. 380; Train v. Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 11 N. E. 929; Newton v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 44 N. E. 116. The efficiency of many police regulations depends upon their prompt and summary execution; and therefore, from necessity, certain discretion must be given to the officers who are to make the regulations effective. In Ex parte Ah Fook, supra, this court said: "It is obvious that, to render effectual an inquiry which has for its purpose the carrying into operation of quarantine or health laws, it must be prompt and summary, and we are not aware that any reasonable provisions of the statute clothing such officers or boards with enlarged powers, often exercised by them, have ever been held unconstitutional." In the case at bar the acts of the commissioner are not clothed with that sanctity and protection which accompanies the judicial acts of courts and judges, and the commissioner would be liable officially and personally for wrongful acts done under the color of his office. And then, again, the lien in question here could not be enforced until after a judicial investigation and determination by a court.

Beyond any question, the legislature has the power to declare that to be a nuisance which is such in fact, and we think it safe to assert that everything declared to be a "public nuisance" in the act in question comes clearly within the meaning of that term as defined in Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480. It is known that the existence of the fruit industry in the state depends upon the suppression and destruction of the pests mentioned in the statute. The act in question is therefore a proper exercise of the police power which the legislature has, under section 1 of article 19 of the constitution, to subject private property to such reasonable restraints and burdens as will secure and maintain the general welfare and prosperity of the state. Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383; Train v. Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 11 N. E. 929. In this connection it may be well to observe that the statute does not authorize any injury to, or destruction of, property, but, on the contrary, its provisions are beneficial to the very property upon which it operates. The lien given by the statute is not for a delinquent tax, but for an indebtedness due the county, and the enforcement of it in the way prescribed by the statute is not obnoxious to any constitutional inhibition. The case of Boorman v. City of Santa Barbara, 65 Cal. 313, 4 Pac. 31, and the other California cases cited by respondent to show that private property cannot be subject to burdens without due process of law, are sound in principle, but as to the matter of notice the statute here under consideration is not like any of the statutes in those cases. The subject of those statutes (street improvement) does not naturally call for such prompt and immediate action as might be necessary in the abatement of a contagious nuisance like that treated of in the statute here in question. Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 69. We discover no conflict with any constitutional provision in the act under consideration as finally amended in 1891.

The demurrer, however, was properly sustained for the reason that the complaint, in alleging the appointment of John Scott as horticultural commissioner, did not follow strictly the language and directions of section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The language of the complaint was that "the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county duly appointed John Scott to be and constitute a horticultural commission," etc. To accord with said section 456, the averment should have shown that the appointment was made by order of the board, "duly given and made." Judah v. Fredericks, 57 Cal. 389. But this is a matter that may be corrected by amendment of the complaint to conform to said section. Paving Co. v. Bolton, 97 Cal. 8, 31 Pac. 625. We see no other particular in which the complaint is materially defective. For the foregoing reasons, we advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to permit the plaintiff to amend its complaint to accord with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to permit the plaintiff to amend its complaint to accord with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

PEOPLE v. ARNETT. (Cr. 537.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 11, 1899.)
CRIMINAL LAW—INDICTMENT—CONVICTION OF ANOTHER OFFENSE—VERDICT—INSTRUCTIONS—JUDGMENT.

1. A defendant cannot be convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon under an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, which does not charge that the assault was made with a deadly weapon.

2. Under a verdict finding defendant guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon, the prosecution being based on an information charging him with assault with intent to murder, but failing to charge that the assault was with a deadly weapon, the court has no jurisdiction to enter judgment against defendant for an assault with a deadly weapon, though the verdict for such crime was found under an erroneous instruction requested by him.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

J. W. Arnett was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and appeals. Reversed.

E. V. Spencer and H. D. Burroughs, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. In the information in this case it was charged that the appellant did feloniously, etc., "assault Mrs. Belinda Arnett, with intent then and there to murder said Mrs. Belinda Arnett, contrary to the form," etc. The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant, J. W. Arnett, guilty of an assault upon the person of Mrs. Belinda Arnett with a deadly weapon." Thereupon the court entered judgment that appellant be imprisoned in the state prison for a term of two years. The appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying the motion for a new trial.

It is well settled that, under an indictment or information for an assault with intent to commit murder which does not charge that the assault was made with a deadly weapon, the defendant cannot be convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon. People v. Murat, 45 Cal. 281; People v. Vanard, 6 Cal. 562. These cases have always been followed. People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 227, 33 Pac. 901, only holds that a party may be convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon "under an indictment or information charging the greater offense to have been committed with a deadly weapon." The fact that the defendant in the case at bar asked for the erroneous instruction, under which the jury, no doubt, found their verdict, makes no difference; for the court had no jurisdiction to try him for any other offense than such as is charged in the indictment, or included within it. Consent cannot confer jurisdiction. People v. Granice, 50 Cal. 448.

It has been suggested that the verdict can be construed as finding the appellant guilty of only a simple assault, and that the court below should be instructed to enter judgment upon the verdict as if it was for the crime of simple assault and affix the punishment accordingly; but we see no ground upon which we can change a verdict for a well-defined crime, which is a felony if imprisonment in the state prison is imposed, into a verdict for a misdemeanor only. In People v. Vanard, supra, which is relied on as supporting this suggestion, under an indictment for "an assault with intent to commit murder" the verdict was, "Guilty of an assault with intent to do bodily injury;" but there was no such crime as an assault "with intent to do bodily injury," and the court could well hold the latter part of the verdict to be mere surplusage. But in the case at bar the jury found the defendant guilty of the very crime declared in section 245 of the Penal Code, and in the language of that section, which makes it a crime to commit "an assault upon the person of another with a deadly weapon." The verdict, therefore, cannot be held to be anything different from the one which the jury returned, to wit, an assault upon the person of Mrs. Arnett with a deadly weapon; and, as there was no jurisdiction to try the appellant for the crime of which he was found guilty by the verdict, there was and is no jurisdiction in the court to enter any judgment upon that verdict. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and a new trial is ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; HARRISON, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

GAROUTTE, J. I concur in the views and conclusion declared in the main opinion. It is suggested that this court may now declare the verdict to be one of assault. But this is not possible. Such a verdict would be one rendered by this court. The jury declared the defendant guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon,—a verdict which was complete and perfect, as far as any matter of form is concerned,—and this court cannot change it. It would be usurping the functions of a jury to do so. The mere fact that "assault" is an offense included in the offense declared by the verdict in no way changes the legal aspect of the matter. Let us assume that two lower-grade offenses were included in the verdict as found by the jury.

Which one would this court declare the offense of which defendant was found guilty? The crime of assault is included in the crime of rape. If the verdict in this case had found the defendant guilty of rape, with equal propriety it could now be claimed that this court should declare such a verdict one of assault.

PACIFIC PAV. CO. v. MOWBRAY. (Sac. 473.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 18, 1899.)
MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—APPEAL—RECORD—IMPROVEMENTS—PROTEST—MAJORITY OF FRONTAGE—EVIDENCE—DETERMINATION OF COUNCIL.

1. A finding that a proposed street improvement was not objected to by a majority of the property owners fronting on the line of such proposed improvement will not be reversed on appeal, where the record merely shows that the owners of a certain amount of frontage protested, but failed to show the aggregate frontage included in the improvement.

2. An assessment, and warrant for its collection, in the hands of a contractor, who has made a public improvement, is prima facie evidence of its regularity and correctness, and of the validity of prior proceedings and acts of the city council on which the assessment depends.

3. Where a protest against a proposed improvement, presented to a city council, does not purport to be signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage, the council need not determine or enter of record its judgment that such protest was not signed by the owners of a majority of the property along the line of the proposed improvement.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by the Pacific Paving Company against J. L. Mowbray to enforce an assessment for a city improvement. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Budd, for appellant. Jas. A. Louttit and W. J. Bartnett, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. Action upon a street assessment. The city council of Stockton ordered certain improvements to be made upon Market street, in that city, from the west line of Hunter street to the west line of American street, and awarded the contract therefor to the plaintiff. After its completion to the satisfaction of the superintendent of streets, that officer issued to it an assessment for the cost of the work, together with a warrant for its collection, and after demand therefor plaintiff brought the present action to foreclose the lien of its assessment upon certain property belonging to the defendant. Judgment was rendered in its favor, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant has appealed.

The plaintiff's right of action was contested by the defendant upon the ground that the city council had no jurisdiction to order the improvement, for the reason that the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property on the line of the proposed improvement filed a protest against the same within 10 days after the expiration of the publication of the notice of intention. Upon this issue the court found against the allegation of his answer, and this finding is attacked as not supported by the evidence. In support of his averment, the defendant introduced a document, which had been filed within said 10 days with the city clerk, purporting to be a protest against the improvement from certain owners of property along the line thereof. This document appears to have been originally signed by the owners of 1,396 feet of frontage, but upon its face the signatures of certain signers owning 303 feet had been erased, leaving 1,093 feet of frontage represented by the other signers. It is claimed by the appellant that the erasures were unauthorized, and that, by reason of the protest as originally signed, the city council was barred from proceeding with the improvement. This proposition, however, depends upon whether the original signers of the document constituted the owners of a majority of the frontage. The record fails to show the amount of the entire frontage of Market street between Hunter and American streets, and we are unable to say whether 1,396 feet is a majority thereof. The superior court has found that it was not, and it was incumbent upon the appellant, if he would have that finding set aside, to have it appear from the record that it was contrary to the evidence. Error is not to be presumed, but must in all cases be made to appear before the appellant is entitled to a reversal. It is thus unnecessary to consider whether the erasures on the protest were properly made.

The assessment, and other documents connected therewith, are made by the statute prima facie evidence of its regularity and correctness and of the prior proceedings and acts of the city council, and their introduction in evidence by the plaintiff threw upon the defendant the burden of establishing the contrary. Such prima facie evidence was not overcome by introducing the above protest, unless the defendant also showed that it was signed by the owners of a majority of the frontage. As this protest did not "purport" to be signed by the owners of a major frontage, it was not necessary that the city council should determine or enter of record its judgment that it had not been legally signed by such owners. The judgment and order are affirmed.

LAKE SHORE CATTLE CO. v. MODOC LAND & LIVE-STOCK CO. (Sac. 550.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1899.)

ENGROSSMENT OF STATEMENT FOR NEW TRIAL—CERTIFICATION—DISMISSAL OF MOTION—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

1. Under the statute it is sufficient engrossment of documents on file for the purpose of a hearing in the trial court on a motion for a new trial to refer to them as "exhibits" with the direction, "Here insert."

2. At a hearing on motion for a new trial appellant showed a statement engrossed within the meaning of the law, and sought leave to obtain the certification of the trial judge thereto, who, it appears, refused to certify to it when first presented, because of some minor omissions, which were corrected, but not until his term had expired, and he had left the county. Later he returned for about 10 days, but during that time appellant neglected, through pressure of other business, to present the statement to him. Held, appellant's negligence in not presenting the statement was not of such consequence as to warrant the court in dismissing the motion, and in doing so abused its discretion.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.

Action by the Lake Shore Cattle Company against the Modoc Land & Live-Stock Company. From an order dismissing defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

Spencer & Raker and Clarence A. Raker, for appellant. D. W. Jenks, D. F. Harris, and J. T. Richards, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This appeal is from the order of court dismissing defendant's motion for a new trial for want of diligence in its prosecution, and for unnecessary and vexatious delay in the engrossment of the statement on the motion. The statement on motion for a new trial was settled upon September 25, 1896, by the Honorable C. L. Clafin, then judge of the trial court, and the judge who tried the cause. The moving party was given until November 25, 1896, to engross the statement as settled. Before November 25th the statement was delivered to the adverse attorneys for comparison, and to the judge for his certificate and signature. It did not receive the judge's signature, but no intimation was made to appellant's attorneys, either by the judge or by opposite counsel, that the engrossed statement was defective or incomplete. Later appellant's attorneys obtained possession of the engrossed statement, and presented it to the judge for his signature on December 30, 1896. The judge's term of office was about to expire, and the attorneys were informed that he proposed leaving the county, and going to Los Angeles, as in fact he did. The judge returned to and was present at the county seat for about 10 days in the early part of the month of February, but during that time the attorney for the appellant who had charge of this particular matter, being much pressed with other business affairs, neglected to re-present the statement to the judge. On February 17th the plaintiff in the action served notice upon defendant of its motion to dismiss defendant's motion for a new trial upon the indicated grounds, and upon the same day served a subpoena duces tecum upon one of the attorneys for defendant to produce the proposed statement of the case on motion for a new trial, with the amendments thereto. Upon the hearing these facts were disclosed, and, in addition, it was shown that Judge Clafin had never refused to settle the engrossed statement, but had made objection to signing the statement offered to him upon the ground that it was incomplete in certain particulars. Appellant here further showed that it had been unable to forward the proposed statement to Judge Clafin in Los Angeles, or to take it to him for his certification, because of the subpoena duces tecum which had been served upon its attorney, and it sought leave of court to withdraw the proposed statement, and take it to Judge Clafin for his certification. Permission to do so was refused. The alleged defect in the engrossed statement was that certain documents on file in the action had not been transcribed at length in the engrossed statement, but exact reference had been made to them as exhibits, with the direction, "Here insert." But as to documents on file this is a sufficient engrossment for the purposes of the hearing before the trial court. It is a procedure countenanced by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 648), and justified by our decisions. Of course, in printing the transcript on appeal to this court, the documents must be inserted at length. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Hayne, New Trial & App. § 156 et seq. Aside from any consideration of the question of the court's power to dismiss a motion for a new trial pending the settlement of the statement upon appeal, and conceding that it has such power, we think its exercise under the circumstances indicated was an abuse thereof. Appellant had engrossed and presented its statement in due time. Judge Clafin's refusal to certify to it seems to have been based upon one or two minor and trifling omissions, which were at once corrected. He left the county the day after this refusal, remaining away for a month, and returning for but 10 days in the early part of February. Within a few days after his second departure this motion to dismiss was noticed and served. At the hearing appellant showed a statement engrossed within the meaning of the law, and sought leave of court to obtain the certification of Judge Clafin, for Judge Clafin had never refused to act, and in fact at a later time, as appears by another appeal in this case, did actually certify to the statement presented to him. If it be said that the appellant was negligent in not seeking out the judge and obtaining his signature during the 10 days of his last stay in the county seat, it was not, we think, negligence so gross, or of such consequence, as to warrant the extreme penalty imposed by the court of an absolute dismissal of the motion. We think in so doing that the court abused its discretion.

The second appeal—that from defendant's motion to vacate the order of dismissal upon the ground that it was improvidently made—needs no consideration.

The third appeal—that from the order of the court taxing costs—presents no especial matters calling for comment. The evidence was sufficient to support the terms allowed by the court, and they appear to have been legal charges. The order of the court taxing costs is therefore affirmed, and the order of the court dismissing defendant's motion for a new trial is reversed.

DEMARTINI v. ANDERSON. (Sac. 596.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1899.)
EVIDENCE—REPUTATION OF PREMISES—LEASE OF PREMISES FOR IMMORAL PURPOSES.

1. Evidence of the character of the inmates and frequenters of a house is admissible to show that it was being used for prostitution and assignation.

2. In an action for rent, evidence of the reputation of a house as one of ill fame is admissible on the part of defendant to show that it was being so used with the owner's knowledge, and that the contract was illegal.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by G. B. Demartini against W. A. Anderson, executor of Manuel Dubois, deceased. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. T. Hatfield, for appellant. A. A. De Ligne, Johnson, Whitaker & Linford, and H. W. Johnson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The action is against the respondent, Anderson, as executor of Manuel Dubois, deceased, to recover rent upon a written lease of a certain house and premises on Third street in Sacramento city. It is alleged that the lease was executed by appellant and the deceased on the 1st day of April, 1895, and was for a term of five years from and after that date, at the rental of $50 per month, which the deceased, as lessee, promised to pay; that he paid the rent until his death, which occurred in April, 1897; and that since then respondent has refused to pay any rent, and has repudiated the lease. The defense was that the house was leased by the deceased from appellant for the purpose of conducting it as a house of prostitution and assignation, and that appellant knew of this purpose at the time of the execution of the lease; and that the lease, having thus been made for immoral purposes, against good morals and public policy, was and is illegal and void. The court found the facts to be as averred in the answer,—that at the time of the execution of the lease the house was a house of prostitution, and was conducted as such with the knowledge and consent of appellant; that it continued to be so conducted from the date of the lease to the death of the deceased, with the knowledge and consent of appellant; and that it was rented to the deceased by appellant with the latter's knowledge that it was to be used for the purposes aforesaid. If the lease, with the knowledge and consent of appellant, was made for the purposes alleged in the answer and found by the court, it was unlawful and void; and a court will not aid either party in an attempt to enforce such a contract. Civ. Code, § 1667; Pen. Code, § 316; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 93, 45 Pac. 1015. The contention of appellant—waiving the objection of the respondent that there are no sufficient specifications—that the evidence did not justify the findings above referred to, cannot be maintained. It is sufficient to say that it would be difficult to conceive how the court could have been justified in not finding as it did.

The only contention for a reversal which calls for especial notice is that the court admitted evidence which was inadmissible, and prejudicial to defendant. On this subject the transcript shows 101 specifications of alleged errors, but the main points to be gathered from them all are that the court erred in receiving evidence of the characters of the inmates of the house and of the reputation of the house itself as one of ill fame. As to the evidence of the characters of the inmates and frequenters of the house, the cases seem to all concur in holding it admissible. In section 1452 of 2 Whart. Cr. Law, the author, although he somewhat questions the rule that the bad reputation of the house may be shown, says: "But, however this may be, it is settled that the bad reputations of the persons visiting the house may be put in evidence;" and, as the current of authorities is all that way, the question need not be further discussed.

Whether or not the reputation of the house itself as one of ill fame may be shown is a question about which the cases are somewhat conflicting; but we think that the weight of authority, and the better reason, support the affirmative of the proposition. It has been so held in a large number of states, and the following are some of the cases which so hold: Sylvester v. State, 42 Tex. 496; Morris v. State, 38 Tex. 603; Allen v. State, 15 Tex. App. 321; State v. McDowell, Dud. 346; King v. State, 17 Fla. 183; O'Brien v. People, 28 Mich. 213; Betts v. State, 93 Ind. 375; Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461; State v. Brunell, 29 Wis. 435; State v. Smith, 29 Minn. 193, 12 N. W. 524; Territory v. Bowen, 2 Idaho, 607, 23 Pac. 82; Drake v. State, 14 Neb. 535, 17 N. W. 117; Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467; Com. v. Kimball, 7 Gray, 328. See, also, Moore, Cr. Law, par. 1072, and cases there cited, to support the statement in the text that "a house of ill fame may be proved to be such by direct evidence, or by reputation, or by circumstances,—as that the inmates were reputed to be prostitutes.” We are much more impressed with the reasoning and consistency of the cases which hold that evidence of the reputation of a house of prostitution is admissible than with the reasoning and consistency of those cases which hold differently; for the latter, while excluding evidence of the reputation of the house, permit evidence of the reputation of the inmates of the house for the purpose of showing that it is a house of prostitution, and this seems to be a distinction without much difference. Nearly all the cases to which we have been referred by counsel on both sides were criminal cases, where parties were being criminally prosecuted for either keeping houses of prostitution or leasing them for that purpose; but, if the rule as above stated applies to a criminal prosecution where a man's liberty is at stake, it certainly applies with more force to a mere civil case, where nothing is involved except property.

Appellant complains because evidence was admitted tending to show the character of the house some months before and down to the time of the execution of the lease; but this evidence was clearly admissible, as tending to show the appellant's knowledge of the character of the house, and for what it was used, and what it was expected to be used for. Knowledge, of course, had to be brought home to the appellant, and evidence tending to show that knowledge was properly admitted. In Graeter v. State, supra, the court said: “The owner of a house so occupied may not shut his eyes to that which is patent to the community around him, and stop his ears from that which has become notorious among his neighbors, and say he has no actual knowledge.” And in Cadwell v. State, supra, the court said: “Evidence of reputation of the house previous to a particular time conduces to show its reputation afterwards.” The appellant's brief consists to a very great degree in the mere copied statements of his specifications of error as they appear in the transcript, and we think that what has already been hereinbefore said disposes of the material points upon which the claim for a reversal of the judgment is based. We think that the case was properly tried, and correctly decided, and we see no reason for disturbing the judgment of the court below. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 21, 1899.)

MECHANICS' LIENS — BUILDING CONTRACT — MISREFERENCE TO PLANS—WAIVER.

A building contract referred to plans and specifications as having been signed by the parties as is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, as a condition to the contract's validity, but which in fact were never signed. Held a misreference or misdescription which could not be cured by any oral waiver or oral agreement so as to validate the contract in support of a lien.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Chas. E. Peery, for appellant. Adams, Stafford & Stafford, for respondent. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent H. S. & L. Society.

GRAY, C. This case has been here before (Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 129, 46 Pac. 916); and it was then held that the building contract involved in the case was void because it referred to the plans, drawings, and specifications as having been signed by the parties to the contract, when in fact they were not so signed. The court held this to be “a false reference in a written contract, which cannot be aided by parol evidence,” and that thereby “the contract is left inchoate and not complete, and could not form the basis of recovery.” The judgment, decreeing foreclosure of a mechanic's lien for work and materials done and furnished pursuant to said alleged contract, was reversed, and the cause remanded. The plaintiff then amended his complaint as to the plans and specifications so as to make it read as follows: “That thereafter, and prior to the commencement of the work upon said building, the provision of the said contract requiring the said plans and specifications to be signed by the parties thereto was, by the verbal consent of both parties thereto, duly waived, and the said specifications were not signed by the defendant Frank P. Adams, but the said building was duly erected and completed according to the plans and specifications made by B. E. Hendrickson, the authorized architect employed by the owner, and which were kept in the office of the said architect, subject to the inspection of the parties to the said contract, and others concerned in the erection.” To the complaint as amended the defendants interposed a general demurrer, which was sustained by the court, and the action dismissed. From the judgment of dismissal the plaintiff appeals.

The amendment to the complaint did not cure the defect pointed out on the former appeal. There was no such stipulation in the builder's contract as the amendment to the complaint says was waived. It was not provided or required in the contract that the plans and specifications should be signed by the parties. They were merely referred to and described as already signed. This was a misreference or misdescription that could not be cured by any oral waiver or oral agreement. It is necessary, under section 1183, Code Civ.

Proc., that the whole contract shall be in writing, and signed by the parties thereto. In the present case the plans and specifications are a most important part of the contract. Without them, the nature and extent of the work and materials to be furnished cannot be ascertained. They should have been made a part of the written contract which was signed by the parties, in such a way that no resort to oral evidence would be necessary to show that it was the intention of the parties that they should be a part of such contract. This not having been done, the whole contract, as this court held on the former appeal, is void. Neither the whole of it nor any part of it can be revived by an oral waiver of any other part of it. Oral evidence to contradict or vary the terms of the written contract will be equally improper, with or without the amendment. In any view that may be taken of the amendment to the complaint, it obviates none of the objections upon which the former decision was based. Lumber Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 79, 54 Pac. 533; Willamette Steam-Mills, Lumbering & Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629; Worden v. Hammond, 37 Cal. 61. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

BIRCH v. PHELAN et al. (S. F. 2,085.)

JUROS—FEES—LIABILITY OF COUNTY—CRIMINAL CASES.

1. Act Feb. 27, 1866 (St. 1865-66, p. 122), fixes the amount of fees which jurors in the county and city of San Francisco shall receive, and provides for payment by the parties in civil cases, but makes no provision for payment in criminal cases; and the city charter (St. 1856, p. 145) provides that municipal funds may be used to pay the fees of jurors in criminal cases when the same are by law payable out of the county treasury, and forbids such payment unless required by law. Held, that mandamus will not lie to compel the supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco to allow a claim against the city and county for services rendered as a juror in criminal cases in the superior court of said city and county.

2. Act March 28, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 267), establishing the fees to be paid to jurors and witnesses, does not make jurors' fees in criminal cases in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco payable out of the county and city treasury.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Mandamus by William Birch against James D. Phelan and others, as supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel the allowance by the respondents of a claim presented by plaintiff for services rendered by him as juror in criminal cases. From a judgment in favor of defendants, the plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis P. Boardman, for appellant. Franklin K. Lane, for respondents.

BRITT, C. The defendant Phelan is the mayor of the city and county of San Francisco, and in virtue of his office is president of the board of supervisors of said city and county. The other defendants are members of said board. The plaintiff served as a juror at various times—11 days in all—during the month of March, 1899, upon the trial of sundry criminal causes prosecuted in the superior court of said city and county. He presented to the said board a claim in the sum of $22 for his services as such juror, and demanded that the same be allowed as a valid claim payable out of the municipal treasury. Defendants having refused, plaintiff petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandamus to compel them to allow his claim. The court denied his writ; hence this appeal.

In most of the counties of the state express provision has been made by the legislature for compensation of jurors in criminal cases from the public county funds. Act March 5, 1870, § 28 (St. 1869-70, p. 176) amended March 1, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 188); Jacobs v. Elliott, 104 Cal. 320, 37 Pac. 942. But by section 52 of said act of 1870 the city and county of San Francisco was exempted from the operation of said section 28 thereof. Plaintiff urges, however, that certain other statutes "indicate a positive legislative intent that such fees should be paid," referring to the fees of all jurors in like situation with himself. The first of the statutes thus relied on is the act of February 27, 1866, "concerning fees of jurors and witnesses in the city and county of San Francisco" (St. 1865-66, p. 122), which proceeds as follows:

"Section 1. In the city and county of San Francisco the fees of jurors and witnesses shall be as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 2. The fees of jurors shall be for each cause—and if a cause occupy more than a day, then for each day's attendance—two dollars, * * * to be paid in civil cases by the party in whose favor verdict is rendered before the same may be recovered as costs against the party losing the case. * * * Until they are paid no further proceedings shall be allowed in the action. No person shall receive fees for serving on a coroner's jury."

Section 3 relates to the fees of witnesses in civil suits only.

The court, per Mr. Justice Harrison, said in a recent case: "The right of compensation for services as a juror is purely statutory, and it is for the legislature to determine in what cases such compensation shall be made, as well as the amount and mode of payment, or it may withhold any compensation therefor." Hilton v. Curry, 124 Cal. 84, 56 Pac. 784. Comparing and considering together the several parts of said act of 1866, we find it difficult to perceive in it any intelligible provision for the compensation of jurors in criminal cases. If, however, we could admit that such was the legislative intent, and that language has been employed from which the intent appears, the statute yet fails to support the plaintiff's case. The charter of the city and county—the consolidation act (St. 1856, p. 145)—provides that the municipal funds may be used to pay the fees of jurors in criminal cases "when the same by law are payable out of the county treasury," and forbids such payment from that source unless required "by law," which it defines to be "the constitution and laws made or adopted by the legislature in pursuance thereof" (sections 82, 83, 95). Obviously, there is nothing in the act of 1866 declaring, or even intimating, that such fees are payable out of the local treasury; and we have no more warrant to say that the charge arises by implication against the city and county than to say that it is implied against the state of California,—perhaps not even as much. See Modoc Co. v. Spencer, 103 Cal. 498, 500, 37 Pac. 483.

The other statute, which, in the view of plaintiff, affords foundation for his demand, is the act of March 28, 1895, "to establish the fees of county, township and other officers, and of jurors and witnesses in this state." St. 1895, p. 267. It is unnecessary to set out its provisions touching jurors' fees. The interpretation thereof is affected by considerations quite similar to those already stated in reference to the act of 1866. This court has held, in Hilton v. Curry, above cited, that the purpose of the act of 1895, as regards the fees of jurors, is but to establish the amount of the same, and that it does not fix the source of payment, nor authorize payment out of the public treasury. 124 Cal. 84, 88, 56 Pac. 784. The ruling in that case related to fees of jurors in civil causes, but we see nothing in the statute which would allow a different conclusion upon its effect in the present instance. The claim of plaintiff cannot be supported, and the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

BEDELL v. SCOTT. (Sac. 503.)

TOLL ROADS—JURISDICTION—SUPERVISORS—RECORD OF ACTION OF SUPERVISORS.

Under County Government Act, § 25, subd. 41 (St. 1893, p. 359), providing that the supervisors may authorize the collection of tolls on a free public highway whenever, in their judgment, the expense necessary to operate such public road as a free public highway is too great to justify the county in so maintaining it, the supervisors have no jurisdiction to grant a franchise to collect tolls on such a highway, without first determining that the expense is too great to justify the county in so doing, and one claiming such right must affirmatively show by the records that the supervisors found the prerequisite facts to exist.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Placer county.

Action by E. C. Bedell against J. B. Scott to collect tolls. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Tabor & Tabor, for appellant. John M. Fulweiler, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This was an action to collect an assigned claim for tolls alleged to be due from defendant to plaintiff's assignor for the passage of animals and vehicles over a highway in the county of Placer. The court found the road in question to be a free public highway. The authority of the board of supervisors to fix a toll rate, and to provide for the collection of tolls upon a free public highway, is drawn from subdivision 41 of section 25 of the county government act (St. 1893, p. 359). In the case of a free public highway, the supervisors may authorize the collection of tolls "whenever in their judgment the expense necessary to operate or maintain such public road or highway as a free public highway is too great to justify the county in so operating or maintaining them." The court also found that the license and franchise to collect tolls over and along said free public highway was granted to plaintiff's assignors because, in the judgment of the board of supervisors, the expense necessary to maintain and operate the same as a free public highway was too great to justify the county in so operating and maintaining the same. This finding is attacked. The records of the board of supervisors introduced in evidence failed entirely to show that the board received evidence and made any determination to this effect. Its judgment that the necessary expense in operating a public highway was too great to justify the county in so operating it is prerequisite to its power to confer a license or franchise upon any one to collect tolls over such public highway. Its jurisdiction depends upon the determination of the fact, and its records should show such determination. It is too well settled to need discussion that, when the jurisdiction of an inferior court or tribunal depends upon facts to be ascertained by such tribunal, its record must affirmatively show the existence and determination of such facts. Johnson v. Eureka Co., 12 Nev. 28; Rosenthal v. Plankroad Co., 10 Ind. 359; Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 446; Plummer v. Inhabitants of Waterville, 32 Me. 566; Armija v. Board (N. M.) 7 Pac. 19; People v. Brown, 23 Colo. 425, 48 Pac. 661. Upon the face of the record of the supervisors, it nowhere appears either that the road was a free public highway, or that, in the judgment of the supervisors, the expense of operating and maintaining it was too great to justify the county in the undertaking. The order, being thus radically defective, cannot avail the plaintiff in his asserted right to collect tolls. The judgment and order are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

BLAIR v. SQUIRE et al. (S. F. 1,132.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1899.)

REVIEW—DEEDS—CONSIDERATION—PRESUMPTION—CONSTRUCTION—MORTGAGE—BURDEN OF PROOF—EVIDENCE.

1. The supreme court will not, on appeal, disturb a finding of fact made by a trial court, if there is any substantial evidence to support it.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1614, 1963, subd. 39, providing that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration, the introduction of a deed in evidence places the burden of showing want of consideration on the party alleging it, and carries with it a presumption that it was given for a valuable consideration.

3. Defendant's mother owed her, and defendant was surety for her mother for more than the value of the mother's interest in land conveyed to defendant by absolute deed, in consideration of full satisfaction of the mother's indebtedness. Defendant took possession of the land, collected rents, and paid interest on other liens assumed by her. She did not surrender her mother's notes, but did not keep them with any idea of collecting them, and, at the time of the execution of the deed, defendant took a continuing mortgage from her mother on the land in renewal of a previous mortgage for the same amount, to preserve her priority over other liens. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the deed was an absolute conveyance, and not a mortgage.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Partition by Florence Ethel Blair against Mabel E. Squire and others. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the San Francisco Tool Company, one of the defendants, appeals. Affirmed.

Pringle & Pringle, for appellant. Samuel B. McKee and Fitzgerald & Abbott, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal by the San Francisco Tool Company from an interlocutory judgment and decree and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was brought by the plaintiff for the partition of a tract of land of about 256 acres, situate in the county of Alameda. The title was originally in one Walter Blair, who died intestate leaving surviving him, as his only heirs, his widow, Phebe A. Blair, and two daughters, Florence Ethel Blair, the plaintiff, and Mabel E. Squire, one of the defendants. On the 23d day of August, 1894, the superior court of Alameda county, by proper decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of said Walter Blair, distributed the said real estate to said widow and daughters herein named, in the proportions to which they were entitled under the law. No question is made as to the validity of the said decree of distribution, and there is no conflict between the mother and daughters, and no objection by either of them, to the decree of distribution or to the interlocutory decree and judgment herein entered. The appeal has, in pursuance of a stipulation filed in this court, been dismissed as to the plaintiff, and the decree was satisfactory to all the defendants except the San Francisco Tool Company, which is the appellant herein. The appellant does not question the correctness of the decree as to the plaintiff, nor as to any of the defendants except as to the defendant Mabel E. Squire. For convenience, the San Francisco Tool Company will in this opinion be called the appellant, and the defendant Mabel E. Squire the respondent, as they are the only parties contending here and the parties to be affected by the judgment of this court.

On the 23d day of August, 1894, Phebe A. Blair, by grant, bargain, and sale deed, duly executed and delivered, sold and conveyed all her interest in said tract of land to respondent, which deed was duly recorded in the recorder's office of Alameda county. After this deed was delivered and recorded, and in the month of September, 1894, the appellant brought suit against Phebe A. Blair upon an indebtedness due from her to said appellant. A writ of attachment was duly issued against said Phebe A. Blair, and levied upon all her right, title, and interest in and to said real estate. The appellant in its answer herein did not deny the due execution, delivery, and recording of the said deed to respondent, but alleged, upon information and belief, that the said deed was intended only as a mortgage to secure respondent for certain advances made by her to her mother, and certain indorsements and obligations made by respondent on behalf of, and for the benefit of, her mother, Phebe A. Blair. The real issue, and the only issue in the court below, was as to whether the deed to respondent was in fact a deed or a mortgage. Phebe A. Blair was made a defendant, but did not appear after being served with summons, and her default was duly entered. The case was tried in the court below without a jury, and the court found that the deed "was not given by way of mortgage or security, but was and is an absolute conveyance, as hereinbefore found." The appellant claims that the said finding is not supported by the evidence, and, although the printed record contains 862 folios, this is the sole and only point to be determined here. We have carefully examined the record, and we think the evidence supports the finding. The learned judge of the lower court having seen and heard the witnesses and found the fact, under the elementary rule we cannot disturb the finding if there is any substantial evidence to support it.

The respondent introduced in evidence the deed made by Phebe A. Blair to her. This was presumptive evidence of a valuable consideration. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1614, 1963, subd. 39; Rogers v. Schulenburg, 111 Cal. 284, 43 Pac. 809. The burden of showing a want of consideration was then cast upon appellant, who was seeking to invalidate the deed as an absolute conveyance. Civ. Code, § 1615; Rogers v. Schulenburg, supra. The rule is well settled that evidence to show that a deed absolute on its face is in fact a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing. Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 58, 30 Pac. 1020; Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 284, 33 Pac. 92; Cadman v. Peter, 118 U. S. 73, 6 Sup. Ct. 957, 30 L. Ed. 78.

The appellant called the respondent as a witness in its behalf, and she testified that at the time of the execution of the deed the amount due her from her mother, and the amount of her mother's indebtedness for which she had become and was responsible, was about $108,000; that this was more than the value of her mother's interest in the land; that the deed was intended as an absolute conveyance, and not as a mortgage, and was in full satisfaction of all indebtedness due her from her mother, and of all obligations for which she had become responsible; that after the execution of the deed she has ever since held possession of the property, collected the rents, and paid interest on all obligations so due by her mother; that she assumed and agreed to pay the debts of her mother which were a lien upon the property. This testimony is not contradicted, and is the only evidence offered by appellant to show that the deed was in fact intended as a mortgage. It amply sustains the finding. It certainly is not clear and convincing that the deed was given as security for a continuing indebtedness. It is said that respondent did not deliver up the notes to her mother, and that she at the same time took a continuing mortgage from her mother for some $5,117. The respondent explained keeping the notes. She said that she did not know why they were kept; that her mother did not ask her for them; and that she did not keep them with any idea of collecting them. The $5,117 mortgage was for money actually loaned by respondent to her mother, and she held a prior mortgage to secure it. She explained that to preserve this priority, and as a safeguard, the mortgage was renewed and kept alive separate from her ownership in the land. This the respondent had the right to do. She was not compelled to surrender and cancel a prior lien upon the land deeded to her because by the deed she took the legal title. At most, the circumstances could only tend to throw suspicion upon the good faith of the parties to the deed. They would not here be held sufficient to overthrow a finding based upon, and supported by, uncontradicted evidence in the record. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

MAURER v. KING. (S. F. 1,754.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1899.)

ADMINISTRATION—CLAIMS — PRESENTMENT — LIMITATIONS—CONTRACTS—PER-FORMANCE—FUTURES.

1. Where a decedent had contracted to take certain shares of stock at a certain time, presentment to his administrator of a verified claim for the price agreed, including a copy of the contract, and an offer to surrender the certificates, is a sufficient statement of "particulars of the claim" required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1494.

2. A claim which becomes due on presentation is one "then due," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1498, requiring suit on a claim within three months after rejection by an administrator, "if it be then due."

3. The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1498, that, if a claim against an estate be not due at the time of its rejection, suit shall be brought within two months after it becomes due, was not intended to shorten the preceding provision, requiring suit within three months, if it be then due, but to extend it.

4. Though demand and tender be necessary to mature a claim under a contract as against a party if he be alive, yet they are not prerequisite to filing the claim against his administrator, since the latter cannot perform, and the mere presentment does not subject the estate to costs.

5. Where a person gave in part payment of property certain stock, guarantying it would be worth a certain price within two years, and agreeing to take it back at that price at the end of that time, if the buyer then "holds said stock and so requests," the latter was only bound to make the request within a reasonable time after the two years; and Civ. Code, § 1490, providing that, where an obligation fixes a time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, within reasonable hours, does not apply.

6. The agreement was not within Const. art. 4, § 26, avoiding contracts for the sale and future delivery of stock.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Darwin C. De Golia, for appellant. Wm. R. Davis and F. W. Sawyer, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment, and the contention is that the findings do not support the judgment. The court found all the facts substantially as they are set out in the complaint, and that all the denials and allegations in the answer are untrue, and rendered judgment for defendant.

On the 8th of February, A. D. 1895, one J. W. Smith, for a valuable consideration, executed and delivered to plaintiff the following instrument in writing: "At settlement this 8th day of February, 1895, at Oakland, Cal., and at which time I have purchased George H. Maurer's interest in twenty-five acres of fruit trees, house, etc., on south one-half of section 7, township 18 N., R. 5 E., in Butte county, Cal.; and in part payment I give said Geo. H. Maurer (1,000) one thousand shares of the capital stock of the Shenandoah Quartz-Mining Company (reorganized), at fifty cents per share; and, in order to save said Maurer from any loss on said stock, I guaranty that it will be worth fifty cents or more per share inside of two years from this date, in cash, and if he holds said stock at the end of two years from this date, and so requests, I will take it from him, and pay him for it at fifty cents per share, and I will pay all assessments on said stock that may be levied on it up to April 1, '95, gratis, —as witness my hand the day and date above written. J. W. Smith." Smith died intestate November 15, 1895, and defendant is his administrator. At the end of the stipulated period of two years, plaintiff still had and owned the shares of stock mentioned in the agreement, and on the 12th day of February, 1897, requested the administrator to take said stock, which was then tendered to him, and pay plaintiff 50 cents per share, which was the first demand made by plaintiff upon the administrator. On the same day plaintiff presented to the administrator for allowance his claim for the said sum of $500, which claim was verified on the 8th day of February, A. D. 1897, as a claim for money due. A copy of the contract was attached to the claim, and the same included an offer to surrender the certificates of stock, duly indorsed in blank by Smith, in the same condition in which plaintiff received them from the deceased. The claim was rejected by the administrator on the said 12th day of February, A. D. 1897. This suit was commenced more than two months after that time. Upon this the first point logically in order arises. Respondent, to sustain the judgment, contends: (1) That the money was not due until after demand was made, and, being a claim for money not due, was not presented as required by section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the particulars of the claim are not stated. I think the particulars are stated. (2) That, being in fact a claim not due, suit should have been brought within two months after its rejection, under section 1493, Id. That section declares that suit must be brought "within three months after the date of its rejection, if it be then due, or within two months after it becomes due." It is argued that this claim became due, if at all, upon demand by presentation, and suit should have been brought within two months. There are two quite conclusive answers to this contention: First, if a claim is one which would become due upon presentation, it is a claim then due, within the meaning of this statute; and, secondly, the provision that, when the claim is not then due, suit shall be brought within two months after it becomes due, was manifestly not intended to shorten the time allowed for the commencement of an action, but to extend it. The statute itself makes this obvious.

The next contention is that the amount of 50 cents per share was not due when Maurer verified his claim, because he had not then tendered the stock to the administrator, and had not made his demand for the money. It does not strike me that there is any merit in this contention. Demand could not have been made upon J. W. Smith, for he was dead. It was useless to tender the stock to the administrator and demand payment, for he could not pay until the claim had been allowed. The presentation of a claim to an administrator is in many respects analogous to the commencement of an action, but there are some differences, and one difference is important here. One may not maintain an action on a claim which will become due only on demand, until demand has been made, because it is unjust to subject a defendant to costs until he has neglected or refused to perform his obligation; but the administrator not only cannot perform on demand, but the mere presentation of a claim for an allowance does not subject the estate to payment of costs. And then, in reality, the requirement that claims must be presented before suit can be brought is the statutory mode, as well as the statutory requirement, for making demand upon an estate.

It is also contended that the claim was presented too late, because it was not presented until four days after the stipulated period of two years had elapsed. Respondent cites section 1490 of the Civil Code, which reads: "Where an obligation fixes a time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, within reasonable hours, and not before or afterwards." The contract in question imposed no obligation upon plaintiff, within the meaning of that section. Maurer had paid the consideration for the contract, but Smith had not fully performed. The stipulated two years was not a period within which Maurer was bound to do anything. It was an extension of credit to Smith. Within that time Smith could not be compelled to pay the $500 in lieu of the stock. No doubt, Maurer was bound to exercise his option within a reasonable time after the expiration of the credit, and he certainly did so. The condition is not, however, "if he requests at the end of two years," but "if he holds said stock at the end of two years, and requests." As already stated, the period was a credit to Smith, and was fixed only for that purpose; and there was no express requirement that Maurer should make his request at the end of the period, but that he could not make it sooner.

It is also contended that the contract is void as a contract to deliver stock at a future day, under the provisions of section 26, art.

4, of the constitution: "All contracts for the sale of shares of the capital of any corporation or association on margin, or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void." This provision of the constitution has been considered in several cases by this court. Cashman v. Root, 89 Cal. 373, 26 Pac. 883, 12 L. R. A. 511; Sheehy v. Shinn, 103 Cal. 325, 37 Pac. 393; Kullman v. Simmens, 104 Cal. 595, 38 Pac. 362. These cases establish the proposition that the constitutional policy was to prohibit wagering contracts in regard to the future market value of stocks. "Dealing in futures," such transactions have been sententiously called. As explained in Sheehy v. Shinn, these contracts take various forms, one of them being margin sales. Others are variously called by brokers "puts," "calls," "options," etc. In all cases the customer, if the deal is with a broker, pays and risks something for the purpose of securing a profit from an expected rise in the market value of stocks. Often no actual purchase is contemplated, but settlements are made according to market rates. It has been held that this constitutional inhibition cannot be evaded by varying the form of the contract. If it be in reality a wagering contract, of the character denounced, it is void. It is not so easy to hold the converse of this proposition, that whenever the transaction was but an ordinary business operation, with no intent to gamble in futures, it will be upheld. That would tend to destroy the constitutional policy, and, so far as intent is material, it goes only to the intent to do the act prohibited. The acts plainly prohibited are sales of stock on margin, and contracts for the future delivery of shares of stock. But the provision is highly penal, and greatly obstructs legitimate business transactions. A large amount of property is now owned by corporations, and the daily business transactions of the community naturally involve sales or agreements to sell corporate stock. While, therefore, courts must enforce the constitutional policy, contracts which are neither prohibited by the letter of the inhibition, nor evasions of it, will be upheld. The restriction will not be extended by construction. In the present case there was no contract for the delivery of stock at a future day. The transaction was not a wager as to fluctuations in the market value of stock. The stock was delivered to Maurer as a conditional payment, or as payment with a guaranty. One thousand shares of stock were given in payment of the sum of $500, with a guaranty that Maurer would be able to get that sum for it within two years. If he did not realize that sum within two years, Smith would take the stock back, and pay him $500 in cash. Perhaps this form of contract could be used to effect a prohibited transaction. If such were the case, and the intent was made to appear, it would be declared an attempt to evade the prohibition, and be unlawful. It is to be regretted that public policy requires this restriction upon business transactions, many of which are perfectly proper, and would not really be within the evil which it was intended to remedy. Persons, other than stock dealers, are likely to do the very thing prohibited, without knowing that it is wrong and unlawful, and without intending to wager as to future values. But whether public interests require this drastic provision, so likely to interfere with legitimate business, and often to serve as an instrument for oppressing the unwary, is not for the courts. The case is remanded, with directions to the trial court to set aside the judgment and to enter judgment for the plaintiff, to be paid in due course of administration.

CALIFORNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v.
CULVER. (Sac. 568.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—LIMITATIONS—ESTOPPEL.

1. Where a mortgagee sued to foreclose a mortgage under a stipulation that he might elect to declare the debt due on the mortgagor's failure to pay interest as provided, which suit was subsequently dismissed by consent, and without prejudice, on payment of the interest due, limitations did not begin to run against a subsequent action to foreclose after maturity of the debt from the date of the prior suit, since the mortgagor's election to consider the debt due at that time was waived by his acceptance of the interest and dismissal of the suit.

2. Where, after a suit to foreclose a mortgage under an election to consider it due on failure to pay interest, the mortgagor paid the interest, and on his motion the suit was dismissed without prejudice, he and his successors in interest, having thereafter made payments both of principal and interest on the debt, are estopped to claim that limitations, as against a subsequent suit to foreclose the mortgage within the time limited after its maturity, began to run from the mortgagor's election to declare the debt due, by the institution of the former suit.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Shasta county.

Action by the California Savings & Loan Society against F. D. Culver, administrator, etc. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Cobb, for appellant. J. F. Cowdery, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Action on a note and mortgage made and executed to plaintiff by the defendant Lake. The only defense is the four-years clause of the statute of limitations applicable to written instruments. Judgment went for plaintiff, and the appeal is from the judgment, upon the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions by the owner of the mortgaged premises, who got title, subject to the mortgage, through mesne conveyances from Lake, who does not appeal.

The note was for $10,000, was made and dated January 21, 1891,—the mortgage being:

of the same date,—and is, on its face, payable “three years after date.” This action was brought July 16, 1896, which was within four years after the maturity of the note; but appellant contends that the statute should be held to have run from the 14th day of March, 1892, which was more than four years before the commencement of the action. This contention is based upon the following facts: The note provides that the interest should be paid yearly, upon the 1st of January, and that, if not so paid, it should become part of the principal; and, further, that, if any part of the interest should not be paid within 30 days after the same should become due, “then the whole of said principal and interest shall forthwith become due and payable, at the election of the holder of this note.” The provision of the mortgage on this subject is that, if any interest shall remain unpaid for 30 days after due, then “said mortgage might be foreclosed by an action for that purpose brought, without demand or notice to defendant of election to consider the mortgage due.” On said March 14, 1892, plaintiff brought an action against Lake to foreclose for the whole amount of the principal and interest, upon an averment in the complaint that the interest due January 1, 1892, had remained unpaid for more than 30 days. Summons was served on Lake, who did not answer or appear in time; and, his default having been entered, a judgment of foreclosure was rendered. Afterwards, in November, 1892, Lake made a motion to open the default in the action and to set aside and vacate the judgment; and he based his motion upon an affidavit made by himself, in which, among other things, he stated that he had paid the interest due; that, for various reasons given, the default was improperly taken against him; and that he had “a good and substantial defense to this action, on the merits thereof.” The affidavit closed with a prayer “that the said judgment may be set aside, and said default opened, and this defendant be allowed to answer on the merits to said complaint, and that said action may be dismissed.” Afterwards the plaintiff filed a written paper in the case, whereby he “consents to said default being opened, and to judgment vacated, and the action dismissed without prejudice to a new action; each party to pay its own costs.” Thereafter the court made the following order: “Upon reading and filing the stipulation of the parties consenting thereto, it is hereby ordered that the default of said defendant, heretofore taken in said cause, be set aside, and the judgment heretofore rendered be vacated, and that said action be dismissed, without prejudice to a new action; each party to pay its own costs.” The court found that on “September 21, 1892, all the interest in default at the time of the institution of said action, and all interest due or payable on said promissory note up to said September 21, 1892, was, by the then legal holder and owner of the premises by said mortgage conveyed, paid to plaintiff, and by plaintiff received in full discharge of said default, and with and under the agreement that said action of March 14, 1892, should be dismissed, and the time of payment of said promissory note and the moneys therein mentioned be and remain as by the terms of said promissory note expressed.” This finding is sustained by the evidence. Thereafter, and up to January 1, 1896, all interest on the note was paid as it became due by the holder of the legal title of the mortgaged premises, and about $2,000 of the principal was also paid. This present action was brought to recover the balance due upon the principal, together with interest from January 1, 1896. The contention of appellant is that, notwithstanding the above facts, the whole of the principal and interest of the note unpaid was barred in four years from the commencement of the first suit. We do not think that this contention can be maintained.

Statutes of limitation are intended to prevent stale claims from springing up after the lapse of long periods of time, to the surprise of parties or their representatives, when loss of papers, deaths of witnesses, and worn-out recollections make the presentation of the actual facts in the case impossible or extremely difficult, and are not intended as defenses to just demands of comparatively recent origin. Still, as such statutes must necessarily fix definite periods of time, they uphold defenses which are clearly within them, however unjust and unconscionable such defenses may be. But where, in cases like those last mentioned, the facts relied on leave it greatly in doubt whether or not the defense is within the clause of the statute pleaded, a court will not indulge in a strained construction in order to support it. This rule is always observed. It is stated in 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 692, as follows: “It is important to keep clearly in mind the double aspect of statutes of limitations—First, as an obstacle to just claims; and, secondly, as an aid to just defenses which have been rendered uncertain by the molding effects of time.” In the case at bar appellant says that the statute commenced to run on March 14, 1892, when the first suit was commenced; and he bases his whole contention upon the asserted rule—which is frequently reiterated in the briefs—that, when the statute is set in motion, it never ceases to run. This rule has, no doubt, been frequently declared, in general terms, in judicial opinions and text-books. But it will usually be found to have been used as stating the two propositions that when the statute has begun to run no subsequently accruing disabilities can interrupt it, and that one disability cannot be tacked onto another. In Id. p. 732, it is said: “These two rules, together with the preliminary one that when the statute is once in motion nothing interrupts it, are merely different forms of statement of a single principle, already stated,—that, after the statute is under way, no subsequently accruing disabilities can in any way affect it." And, as instances of the rule, it has been held that (when there is no statute to the contrary) if a man dies even one day after his cause of action accrues, and leaves infant heirs, the latter's disability of infancy does not avail; that if a woman is an infant when her right accrues, and before she comes of age marries, becomes insane, and dies, leaving infant heirs, no one of these subsequent disabilities is material; and that where a plaintiff was insane when his cause of action accrued, but recovered his sanity for a period, and then relapsed into insanity, the statute was set in motion by his sanity, and his relapse did not stop its running. These considerations are perhaps not very important in the case at bar; but, since the rule is so confidently relied on here, it is proper to look somewhat to the reason which underlies it, and the extent to which it goes. In the case at bar, plaintiff is not seeking the aid of a subsequently accruing disability, or of any disability whatever.

But, whatever the full meaning of the rule above noticed may be, it clearly has no applicability until after the statute has begun to run. When did it begin to run in the case at bar? That is, when did it begin to run against the cause of action upon which this present suit is based? Appellant contends that the commencement of the first action in March, 1892, set the statute in motion. It is somewhat of a solecism to say that the commencement of the action starts the statute of limitations, for the general rule is that the bringing of the suit stops the running of the statute. 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 746, and cases there cited. It is meant, however, we suppose, that the bringing of the suit in 1892 was a declaration by plaintiff of his election to consider the whole amount of the note due. It has been definitely settled, however, in this state, that, even where it is expressly declared on the face of the note that upon default in the payment of any interest the whole principal shall become immediately and absolutely due, still such a clause is a mere penalty for the benefit of the payee or holder, which he may waive by accepting interest after due, and that the statute in such a case does not begin to run until the principal becomes due according to the terms of the note. Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 242; Mason v. Luce, 116 Cal. 232, 48 Pac. 72; and Richards v. Daley, 116 Cal. 336, 48 Pac. 220. And where, as in the case at bar, the provision of the note is that upon a default in paying interest the principal shall become due, at the election of the holder, there the assertion of such election merely puts the holder in the position of the holder of a note which upon its face declares, in the first instance, that upon default in interest the whole principal shall immediately become due. And the declaration of plaintiff's election by bringing the first action did not put it out of his power to waive the penalty, which he did by accepting the interest and dismissing the action. He still had the same power to waive the penalty which he would have had if the note, as in the cases above cited, had originally provided for the maturity of the principal upon default in paying any interest. In 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1183, it is said: "When a mortgagee has made his election to recover the principal sum due, under a stipulation that he shall have this election upon the nonpayment of interest for thirty days after it becomes due, he cannot be compelled to waive this provision and accept the interest. Undoubtedly the unconditional acceptance of the interest in default would be a waiver of the default." And in Lawson v. Barron, 18 Hun, 414, and in Langridge v. Payne, 2 Johns. & H. 423, cited in support of the text, the principle was applied where the interest had been accepted after suit to foreclose had been commenced. Appellant has stated one or two cases where the court, after the real questions involved in the case had been disposed of, said, by way of dictum, that it would have been otherwise if the plaintiff had elected to consider the principal due; but, as in those cases the judicial mind was not directed to the question as one before the court to be determined, the expressions used have little weight as authority. Moreover, the cause of action in the case at bar was not, as in the first action, a failure to pay the first year's interest, but was a failure to pay the principal then due according to the terms of the note, with some interest which accrued in later years; and against this cause of action, under the circumstances of this case, the statute of limitations had not commenced to run before the maturity of the note. Moreover, the appellant is estopped by his acts and those of his predecessors in interest, as above stated, from setting up the statute of limitations in this case; and to allow him to do so would be to allow him to practice a fraud upon the plaintiff. If plaintiff had commenced the first action when no interest was really due, and had been compelled for that reason to dismiss it or to allow judgment against him, no one would claim that the provisions of the note had been in any way changed. And the same result follows from the facts that Lake, in his motion to open the default, stated in his affidavit that such interest had been paid and accepted; that he prayed to have the action dismissed for that reason; and that for such reason, by consent and stipulation of both parties, the action was by the court dismissed. These facts bring the case entirely within the principles upon which estoppels are founded. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SMITH et al. v. HAWKINS. (Sac. 578.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES—JUDGMENT—REVIEW.

Where, in an action to quiet a water right, defendant claimed a certain amount of water as a riparian proprietor, plaintiff, claiming a prior right to a certain amount of the water, was not injured by a judgment finding defendant to be the owner of the water as riparian proprietor, but subject to plaintiff's prior rights to a fixed amount, measured as prescribed; he having claimed no riparian rights.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Nevada county.

Action by Mary Ella Smith and others against Patrick Hawkins. From a judgment for plaintiffs, they appeal. Affirmed.

P. F. Simonds and A. Burrows, for appellants. C. W. Kitts and J. M. Walling, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to quiet title to certain water and ditch rights. Plaintiffs had judgment, from which they appeal on the judgment roll alone. There is no brief by respondent on file. Appellants complain that there is a want of certainty in both the judgment and findings, "in not fixing by any known method of measuring the amount of water defendant is entitled to take from Wolf creek" (citing Water Co. v. Sargent, 112 Cal. 230, 44 Pac. 560), and also because the judgment "ignores the rule that the right of defendant is limited to the one hundred inches of water which it is found the defendant has appropriated to a useful purpose" (citing Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 497, 47 Pac. 454). The answer alleged "that defendant is the owner of lot 25, through which the creek runs, and of all dams, ditches, and water rights thereon," and "that he is the owner and has a prior right to so much of the water as will supply his ditch with a capacity of five hundred inches, measured under a six-inch pressure." The findings and judgment award to plaintiffs a prior right to 180 inches, and to defendant 100 inches, measured under a 6-inch pressure, "subject to such prior right of plaintiffs; * * * that defendant is the owner as riparian proprietor, subject to the prior right of plaintiffs aforesaid to all the water of said Wolf creek." Plaintiffs express themselves as satisfied with the findings and judgment to this point. But they complain (1) of the conclusion of law, "that defendant is entitled, as appropriator and riparian proprietor, to have the balance [i. e. the water remaining after plaintiffs receive their 180 inches] of the waters of said creek flow onto and over lot twenty-five, described in the manner herein"; and (2) to the judgment, "that the defendant is the owner as riparian proprietor, subject to the prior right of plaintiffs aforesaid to all the waters of said Wolf creek." We are asked to strike this latter clause from the judgment.

It is manifest that defendant gets no rights whatever, except subordinate to plaintiffs' rights. He can take no water at all, either as an appropriator or riparian proprietor, until after plaintiffs have received the 180 inches awarded them. When plaintiffs have had their portion, we cannot see that it concerns them by what method defendant measures to himself the 100 inches awarded to him as an appropriator. Plaintiffs make no claim as riparian proprietors, and we cannot see that they are injured by the findings or judgment as to defendant's riparian rights. Defendant alleged enough in his answer to raise an issue as to his riparian rights, and we must presume that the evidence justified the findings on this appeal. The court had, just previous to the clause last above quoted, adjudged that defendant, "aside from his riparian rights, is the owner of the right to the use of one hundred inches of the waters of said creek, and no more, measured under a six-inch pressure, miner's measure, to the extent of the use of the same from May 1st to October 1st of each year, * * * subordinate to the said rights of said plaintiffs." Reading this latter provision in connection with the clause which plaintiffs ask to have stricken out, the judgment gives defendant 100 inches as an appropriator, and the remaining water as a riparian proprietor, but both rights are subject to plaintiffs' prior right to 180 inches at all times. We may fail to clearly understand plaintiffs' point, but, so far as we are able to discover, they cannot possibly be injured by the judgment. The judgment should be affirmed.

PER OURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES—TRIAL—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—MISCONDUCT.

1. Where, in a prosecution for burglary, an officer testified that he had searched the prisoner's trunk, it was reversible error for the prosecution to ask him how he came to make the search, knowing that the answer would show that the prisoner was suspected of another theft though the court sustained an objection to the question after the officer's answer to that effect had been given.

2. Where an officer's testimony that he had searched prisoner's trunk because he was suspected of a theft other than that charged had been ruled out, it was reversible error for the prosecuting attorney, in his closing address, to state that he personally knew that the prisoner's trunk was not searched for the theft stated by the officer, but for a third theft, though such misconduct was rebuked by the court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

John J. Valliere was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed.

Geo. E. Gardner, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

TEMPLE, J. Defendant, having been convicted of the crime of burglary, appeals from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. The crime was committed, if at all, in the dormitory, called a "bunk house," on the Cosby ranch, in Butte county, on the 15th of November, 1897. Defendant had once been employed on the ranch, and on that day called to see some of the workmen. He complained of illness, and went into the bunk house ostensibly to rest. The men were in the fields at work. The next day several of them missed various articles which they had left in the bunk house, and defendant was at once suspected of the larceny. The defendant was arrested on the evening of the following day at Marysville, and certain articles, which were identified by some of the workmen as their property, and which at the time of the alleged burglary were in the bunk house, were found in his possession, among others a certain revolver. Defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and testified that the revolver was his property, and had been in his possession for a long time previous to the alleged crime. In rebuttal, a constable was called, who testified, against objections which were perhaps insufficient, that on the 15th of November he searched the person and trunk of defendant at Chico, because on that morning a number of articles had been taken from rooms in the Hallam House, and he testified that defendant then had no pistol. The evidence was relevant, if, as the judge then stated, defendant had testified that the pistol was in his trunk all that day. I have not found that statement in his evidence, but, in any event, it was improper to ask the witness how he came to make the search, knowing, as the district attorney must be presumed to have known, that the answer would disclose the fact that defendant was suspected of having taken articles from the rooms of the Hallam House in Chico.

The objection, at first overruled, was finally sustained, but the answer had been given. The matter was again brought up in the argument. In addressing the jury, among other matters, the prosecuting officer said: "This trunk was not searched for this theft in Chico, but for another theft that I know of to my own knowledge." This statement was in the nature of testimony. It was the assertion of a damaging fact, not only not proven, but in regard to matters which had been expressly ruled out. The misconduct was much more flagrant than that in the Bowers Case, 79 Cal. 415, 21 Pac. 752. Indeed, among the numerous cases discussed in People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 Pac. 1078, there is none worse. In my opinion, the examination was inexcusable, and the statements contained in the closing address were an outrage upon justice, which ought not to be allowed to pass. The court promptly rebuked the attorney, but that did not cure the injury. Rebukes do not seem to have any effect upon prosecuting officers, and probably as little upon juries. The only way to secure fair trials is to set verdicts as procured aside. The judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial awarded.

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 24, 1899.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION—REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS.

An action was commenced in justice court, and on the next day after the day set for trial, no answer having been filed or appearance made, judgment by default was entered by a justice holding court in the absence of the regular justice. Forty days thereafter defendant's attorney filed an affidavit, setting forth that he had prepared an answer in the case, and mailed it to the regular justice, asking that the case be continued; that he also addressed a similar letter to plaintiff's attorney; that the letters were mailed in time to have reached the parties before the day set for trial; that the regular justice was absent, and that the said letter addressed to him was received by a party in his office, who made an indorsement showing that it had been received before the day set for trial. Held, that an order by the justice declaring the judgment void, and ordering defendant's answer filed, and fixing a day for trial, were beyond his jurisdiction.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Certiorari by Charles Simon and another against the justice court of the city of Stockton and C. P. Rendon, the justice of the peace. From an order of the superior court confirming an order of the justice annulling a judgment, relators appeal. Reversed.

Max Grimm, for appellants. H. W. Hut-ton, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in a proceeding in certiorari in which the petitioners therein, Simon and Busch, sought to have certain orders of a justice's court annulled. The petitioners commenced an action in a justice's court of the city of Stockton, of which C. P. Rendon was the justice, against one Sparks, who was served with summons in San Francisco, and had until the 31st day of August, 1897, to appear. On the 1st day of September, 1897, it appearing that no answer had been filed by Sparks, and no appearance made by him in any way, default was entered against him by A. C. Parker, a justice of the peace who was then holding court for said Justice Rendon, in the absence of the latter; and, as the suit was for damages for an unlawful act, witnesses were examined and evidence received on the part of plaintiffs, and judgment was rendered on said September 1st against Sparks for $85 and some costs. Nothing further appears to have occurred in the case until the 13th day of October, 1897, which was more than 40 days after the rendition of the judgment. On that day the attorney for Sparks filed an affidavit in the justice's court, in which he stated that on August 28th he prepared an answer for Sparks, and put it into the United States mail on that day, addressed to the said Justice Rendon at Stockton, with a letter saying that he was about to take a trip East, and would not be back until October, and asking that the cause be set for about the 10th or 11th of that month; that he also on said day addressed to the attorney for the plaintiffs in said suit, at his residence in Stockton, a letter inclosing a copy of the answer, in which he also stated his anticipated absence, and asked that the case be not set until about the 11th of October; that he heard no more of the matter until the 4th of October, 1897, when he received a letter from the attorney for the plaintiffs notifying him of the judgment which had been rendered on September 1st, and asking him to have the amount thereof forwarded to him; and that Justice Rendon had left the state on the 24th of August, 1897, and did not return until the 5th of September, and that in the meantime Parker had held court for him, and that one Carroll, who was constable, had indorsed on the envelope containing the answer that it had been received at the office of the said justice on the 31st day of August, 1897. Some other facts not necessary to be noticed were stated in the affidavit, and it concluded with the prayer that the court would "stay the said judgment, and declare the same void and of no effect, and will refuse to issue process thereon, and recall all process and other proceedings taken upon said void judgment." This affidavit was filed October 13, 1897, and on the same day notice was given of a motion for orders staying the judgment, declaring it void, staying further execution, etc. These motions were heard on the 16th day of October, 1897, on which day the court granted the motion to stay judgment herein, declaring the judgment void, and ordering that the answer of Sparks be indorsed, "Filed nunc pro tunc as of the 31st day of August, 1897," and made an order fixing a future day for the trial of the cause. The affidavit of Justice Parker was also filed, in which he stated that on the 31st of August, at the request of plaintiffs' attorney, he made a careful search among the papers which had been filed in the office of Justice Rendon, and among the papers filed in said action, and searched for a letter in which an answer might have been inclosed, and also in the private room of said Rendon, which adjoins the court room, and could not find any answer or other paper filed by the defendant Sparks; that he repeated the search on the morning of September 1st, and before the hearing of the evidence in the action or the rendering of a judgment, but was unable to find any answer or other paper showing the appearance of Sparks; that after testimony had been taken and judgment rendered one Carroll delivered to him an open envelope, addressed to Justice Rendon, in which was found the letter and answer referred to in the said affidavit of the attorney for Sparks; that he did not know whether Carroll took the envelope from his pocket or from a private desk of Carroll in the private office of Rendon; and that "said Carroll was not a clerk of either the justice of the peace of the city of Stockton, or a clerk of the justice of the peace of Stockton township, and not the proper custodian of any pleading or record of said court or action, and had no authority whatever to file, or receive for filing, any paper in said action." The judgment rendered in the said case of the petitioners against Sparks was not void on its face, but was apparently in all respects a regular and valid judgment.

Upon the foregoing facts, we think that the orders above referred to made by the justice of the peace after the rendition of the said judgment were beyond the jurisdiction of the justice to make, and that the superior court erred in confirming the same. A justice's court cannot disturb or in any way interfere with its judgments, except in the manner provided by statute. In Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 274, the court said: "In making the order of the 10th of February, vacating and setting aside the judgment of the 24th of January, the justice of the peace acted without jurisdiction. Inferior courts cannot go beyond the authority conferred upon them by the statute under which they act. They can assume no power by implication, but must keep within the power expressly given. Neither the practice act nor the statutes in relation to justices' courts in the city and county of San Francisco authorizes a review by the justice of his own judgment, except upon motion for a new trial." (At that time a justice of the peace was expressly given power to entertain a motion for a new trial by section 622 of the practice act.) The rule thus declared has never been since questioned, and has been frequently reaffirmed. And, so far as the question here involved is concerned, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are the same as those of the old practice act. See Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. 849; Jones v. Justice's Court, 97 Cal. 523, 32 Pac. 575, and cases there cited. If the motion made in the justice's court to set aside the judgment was based upon the "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect" of Sparks himself, then the court had no jurisdiction over it, because it was not made within 10 days after the judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 859; Weimmer v. Sutherland, supra); if it was based upon the theory that the answer had been filed on the 31st of August, then it raised very serious issues of both law and fact, which the justice's court had no jurisdiction to hear and determine on such a motion. Whether or not the judgment could be set aside by a court of equity on a bill framed for that purpose is a question not now before us. We think that the orders reviewed on the writ should have been vacated by the superior court. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

REIS v. STATE. (Sac. 525.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1899.)
STATES—BONDS—LIABILITY—APPROPRIATION.

Act May 3, 1852 (St. 1852, p. 59), provided for the issuance of bonds to pay the expense of military expeditions, such bonds to be payable out of funds appropriated for that purpose by congress, with the condition that, if such appropriation was insufficient, the bonds would be a valid claim against the state. Congress, in 1854 (10 Stat. 576), appropriated an unapportioned amount intended to pay the military expenses of the state incurred under the act of May 3, 1852, and under prior acts, but such appropriation, while sufficient to cover the expense under the act referred to, was insufficient to pay the entire indebtedness for which it was appropriated, and interest coupons on such bonds held by plaintiff were unpaid. Held that, the liability of the state being conditioned on the failure of congress to make an appropriation sufficient to pay the bonds issued under that act, such appropriation being sufficient for that purpose, the state was not liable, though the appropriation was insufficient to cover another and prior indebtedness not mentioned in the act.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by John O. Reis against the state of California. From a judgment for plaintiff, the state appeals. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, for the State. J. D. Thornton and Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is founded upon interest coupons detached from bonds issued under the act of May 3, 1852 (St. 1852, p. 59). The act is entitled "An act authorizing the treasurer of the state to issue bonds for the payment of the expenses of the Mariposa, Second El Dorado, Utah, Los Angeles, Clear Lake, Klamath and Trinity and Monterey expeditions against the Indians." The first section of the act reads as follows: "A sum not exceeding six hundred thousand dollars is hereby appropriated and set apart as an additional war fund, payable in ten years, out of any moneys which may be appropriated by congress to defray the expenses incurred by the state of California, and interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, in the suppression of Indian hostilities, or out of the proceeds of the sale of any public lands which may be donated or set aside by congress for that purpose; and should no such appropriation or donation be made, or if an amount sufficient should not be appropriated or donated within the said ten years, then the bonds authorized to be issued by this act shall be good and valid claims against the state, and shall be paid out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of the expeditions mentioned in this act." The bonds issued under this act were in denominations of $100, $250, $500, and $1,000 each, payable in 10 years from the date of said act, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, said interest being represented by coupons attached to said bonds, each coupon representing one year's interest. Said coupons were alike in general language, and differed only in number, amount, and date of maturity. The coupons sued upon in this case were coupon No. 2, for $70, detached from bond 33, and coupons No. 3, for $70 each, detached from 181 bonds, and coupons No. 4, for $70 each, detached from the same bonds, and coupons No. 5, for $46.66 each, detached from a like number of bonds; amounting, in the aggregate, to the sum of $39,902.12. The claims were presented to and rejected by the state board of examiners in November, 1894. Findings and judgment went for the plaintiff in the court below, except as to coupons No. 3, detached from bonds numbered 3, 10, 11, 12, and 13. In reference to these the court found in favor of the plea in bar, set up in the answer, of the judgment in the case of Sawyer v. Colgan, 102 Cal. 283, 36 Pac. 580. One of the contentions on the part of the state on the appeal is that the state never became liable on the coupons in question, for the reason that within the time specified in the act in which the bonds were issued congress did make an appropriation in an amount sufficient to discharge said bonds and accrued interest thereon. It being the duty of the general government to protect the state against Indian hostilities or insurrections, it was understood on all hands that congress would provide for paying or reimbursing the state for expenses incurred in suppressing said Indian hostilities; and this appears upon the face of the act of the legislature in question. It declares that the bonds are payable out of any moneys which may be appropriated by congress to defray the expenses incurred by the state in the suppression of said Indian hostilities, but, should no such appropriation be made, or if an amount sufficient should not be appropriated, within the 10 years, then the bonds should be good and valid claims against the state. And congress did make provision for paying such expenses incurred by the state. Section 9 of the act of congress of August 5, 1854, making appropriations for the support of the army, reads as follows: "And be it further enacted that the secretary of war be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the amount of expenses incurred and now actually paid by the state of California in the suppression of Indian hostilities within the said state prior to the 1st day of January, A. D. 1854, and that the amount of such expenses, when so ascertained, be paid into the treasury of said state: provided, that the sum so paid shall not exceed in amount the sum of $924,259.65, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated." 10 Stat. 576. At the time this act was introduced in congress—in January, 1854—the amount therein specified was estimated to cover all the state's liability, both principal and interest, incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities covered by the act of 1852, under which the present action is brought, and the act of 1851. But at the time the act passed, to wit, August 5, 1854, interest had accrued on the bonds issued under said acts of 1851 and 1852, so that the amount appropriated by congress fell short of the total amount of principal and interest then due.

Sawyer v. Colgan, supra, was an application for a writ of mandate to compel the controller of the state to issue a warrant upon the state treasury for the amount claimed to be due on a certain bond and on certain coupons. The bond was issued under the act of 1852, the same as the bonds from which the coupons in this case were detached. Some of the coupons in that case were attached to said bond 420. The other coupons were detached from bonds issued under the same act, and the remainder were detached from other bonds issued under the act of February 15, 1851. In reference to the bonds issued under the act of 1852, this court in that case said: "We think it is clear that the liability of the state upon the bonds thus provided for was conditional. They were conditioned upon the failure of congress to make an appropriation to pay them. Upon the failure of congress to do so, and not before, were they to become good and valid claims against the state. They were to be paid within ten years; and if congress within that time made no appropriation to pay them, they were to be paid out of money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated. Congress did make an appropriation to pay these bonds,"—(citing the provisions of the act of congress of August 5, 1854, supra). "But it is said that subsequent acts of congress imposed conditions which were not in any way binding on the bondholders, and that, in any event, the condition was not complied with until the funds provided by the act of congress were paid into the state treasury. Neither of these contentions, we think, is sound." "The conditions therein provided were not unreasonable, but were merely such precautionary measures against imposition and fraud as congress had a right to take. The act of May 3, 1852, contemplated action on the part of congress, and the bondholders must have known when they accepted the bond that, if congress made an appropriation to pay it, some safeguard would be provided to prevent fraud or imposition." The court then calls attention to the act of congress of June 23, 1860, wherein the secretary of war was authorized to pay out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation on said debt of the state of California, and, answering some of the contentions of the petitioner, says: "It is not sufficient answer to say that this balance was insufficient to pay all the outstanding bonds and coupons. It is enough to know that petitioner's bonds and coupons would have been paid had they been presented at the proper time. * * * If any of these obligations are not paid by reason of erroneous rulings on the part of the officers of the department, it is sufficient to say that the result is not due to the fault of the state or any of its officers. The latter have the right to rely upon the acts of congress. The condition upon which the state was to be liable has not arisen. * * * The bond on its face provides for payment by the state, 'provided the same be not sooner paid from funds anticipated in said act, to be derived from the government of the United States.' It was understood that congress might pay the money over to the state, and in that event the bonds would be payable at the office of the state treasurer; but it was not unreasonable to suppose—and such was anticipated, doubtless—that the demands should be made payable by congress at the national treasury. * * * Our conclusion is that the state of California never became liable to pay bond 420, or its coupons, or any of the coupons in suit of the bonds issued under the act of 1852." In the same case the court held that the petitioner was entitled to the writ as to the coupons detached from the bonds issued under the act of 1851, on the ground of the difference between the two acts. Sawyer v. Colgan was heard in bank, and thoroughly discussed, and the conclusion therein arrived at is conclusive of this case. If, as there decided, "the state of California never became liable to pay bond 420, or its coupons, or any of the coupons in suit of the bonds issued under the act of 1852," it is too clear for argument that the state never became liable for any of the coupons sued on in this action. The coupons involved in that action were of the series No. 3, falling due January 1, 1855. Only one coupon of the series No. 2, for $70, is embraced in this suit. That series fell due January 1, 1854, and were embraced in the estimated expenses covered by the act of congress. The series of coupons No. 3 never ripened, the act of congress having been passed when they had only run seven months of the twelve. However, the amount appropriated by congress was more than sufficient to cover all the bonds matured or partly matured, together with their coupons; and whether, in addition thereto, it was insufficient to provide for other and prior indebtedness not mentioned in the act of 1852, makes no difference. By the act of 1852 it was expressly provided that the state would only be liable in case congress failed to appropriate an amount sufficient to pay that indebtedness, and that was done. As said in Sawyer v. Colgan, these "coupons would have been paid had they been presented at the proper time," and that they have not been paid "is not due to the fault of the state or any of its officers." The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

Proc. § 411, and service of a domestic corporation in the manner prescribed for service on a foreign corporation would not be valid, a county clerk was not authorized to enter a default judgment where the complaint alleged that the defendant was a domestic, and the affidavit of the process server showed service on defendant as a foreign corporation.

2. Mandamus will not be granted to compel a county clerk to enter a default judgment in an action, where the court had declared the service of the summons to be insufficient.

3. In mandamus to compel a county clerk to enter a default judgment, the action of the court in setting aside service of summons cannot be reviewed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Application for mandamus by Isaac Elder against Otto Grunsky, county clerk, etc., to compel the entry of a default judgment. Denied.

J. B. Webster, for petitioner.

HARRISON, J. Application for writ of mandate. The petitioner commenced an action in the superior court for the county of San Joaquin, May 27, 1899, against the Southern Pacific Company, alleging in his complaint that the defendant was at the date of the complaint, and at all the times therein mentioned, "a corporation incorporated, organized, and doing business in this state." A summons was issued upon the complaint on the same day, and on the 9th of June was returned to the clerk's office with an affidavit of M. Haynes indorsed thereon that he "personally served the within summons on the 29th day of May, A. D. 1899, on C. J. Jones, the managing and business agent at Stockton, Cal., of the defendant therein named, by personally delivering to said C. J. Jones personally, in said county of San Joaquin, a copy of said summons attached to a copy of the complaint in the action therein mentioned; that said defendant is a foreign corporation, doing business in the state of California." The respondent herein is the county clerk of San Joaquin county, and the clerk of said superior court; and on June 9th, after the return of the summons, the plaintiff demanded of him that he enter the default of the defendant in said action, which demand was refused. On the 6th of June, the defendant in the action had given notice to the plaintiff therein (petitioner herein) of a motion to set aside the service of said summons, and the court had made an order fixing June 8th as the time for hearing this motion; and on that day this notice, with the admission by the plaintiff of its service, together with certain affidavits offered on behalf of the plaintiff in answer to the motion, were filed with the clerk, and the hearing of the motion was continued until June 12th. On this last day the court made an order granting the defendant's motion to set aside and vacate the service of the summons. Thereafter the plaintiff made the present application to this court for a writ of mandate, directing the respondent to enter the default of the defendant in said action.

A writ of mandate to an officer will issue to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from his office, trust, or station. The county clerk is not authorized to enter the default of a defendant unless proof has been made and filed that such defendant has been served with the summons, together with a copy of the complaint, in the manner provided by the Code. Section 411, Code Civ. Proc., prescribes different modes of service, according to the character of the defendant to be served; and a service that would be good upon a defendant belonging to one of the classes designated in that section would not be good as to a de-defendant belonging to another of those classes, or authorize the entry of a default as to such defendant. In the present case, the clerk was called upon to determine whether the defendant was a domestic or a foreign corporation, and he may well have hesitated to enter the default of the defendant upon the proof of service presented to him. The plaintiff had alleged in his complaint that the defendant was incorporated under the laws of this state, and the clerk was not authorized to disregard this allegation by reason merely of the affidavit of the process server that the defendant was a foreign corporation. If the defendant was, as alleged in the complaint, a domestic corporation, the proof of service was insufficient to authorize its default to be entered. But, irrespective of this, at the time the present application was made for the writ of mandate there was no obligation upon the clerk to enter such default. The superior court had by its order set aside and vacated the service of the summons, and so long as that order remained in force the clerk had no authority to enter a default against the defendant. The court had by its order declared that the very evidence of service upon which the plaintiff claimed the right to a default was insufficient to establish such service, and the clerk was required to observe and obey this order, as it was a part of the court's proceedings in the action. It was within the jurisdiction of the court to make the order, and when made, whether erroneous or not, so long as it was in force, it was binding upon the clerk as well as upon the parties to the action. Neither can the action of the court in setting aside the service be reviewed in this proceeding. The application for the writ is denied.

CARPENTER v. NUTTER et al. (Sac. 548.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—DISMISSAL OF INFORMATION—INSUFFICIENT COMPLAINT.

1. An allegation in a complaint for malicious prosecution alleging that plaintiff was discharged from custody, and informations dismissed, by a judge of the superior court, is insufficient, where it does not allege that such judge was judge of the court in which the informations were pending, or that the dismissal was in court, and not by the judge acting as an individual, which latter act would have been without authority.

2. A complaint for malicious prosecution is insufficient if it does not show that an alleged discharge and dismissal of the information against plaintiff in the prosecution on which the action was based were such as to finally end the same.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Carpenter & Flack, for appellant. A. H. Ashley, H. Orr, and W. M. Gibson, for respondents.

COOPER, C. Action to recover damages for malicious prosecution. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint in the court below and sustained. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendants. This appeal is from the judgment, upon the judgment roll, and for the purpose of reviewing the order of the court sustaining the demurrer. The complaint alleges, in substance, that at all times therein mentioned defendant Nutter was district attorney of San Joaquin county, and that defendant Parker was justice of the peace of Stockton township, in said county; that defendants Langford and De Vries were sureties on the official bond of defendant Nutter as such district attorney; that about the 18th day of January, 1898, the defendants Nutter, Weinberg, Parker, and Sapiro entered into a conspiracy to falsely and maliciously charge the plaintiff with the crime of grand larceny, and in pursuance of such conspiracy the said defendants last herein named filed two written complaints in the justice court of said defendant Parker, and with said Parker as justice of the peace; that upon said complaints warrants of arrest were issued, and plaintiff was arrested and taken in custody, and compelled to give bail to secure his release; that after an examination of witnesses, and upon the advice and at the request of defendant Nutter as district attorney, the defendant Parker, as justice of the peace, held the plaintiff to answer and appear before the superior court of said county upon two charges of grand larceny; that afterwards, on the 21st day of February, 1898, the defendant Nutter, as district attorney, filed two informations in the superior court of said county charging plaintiff with the crime of grand larceny in each case, said informations being based upon the commitments and orders made by said Parker as justice; that in all of said matters the defendants Nutter, Weinberg, Parker, and Sapiro acted maliciously and without probable cause; "that subsequently, and on the 1st day of March, 1898, the plaintiff was released and discharged from custody, and said informations dismissed, by the Hon. Joseph H. Budd, judge of the said superior court, on the ground that there was no evidence, cause, or probability that a crime had been committed, or that plaintiff was in any way connected with the crime of grand larceny, or any crime." There is no allegation in any way connecting defendants Langford and De Vries with the alleged malicious prosecution, unless the fact that they are sureties on the bond of the defendant Nutter as district attorney so connects them. All the defendants demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The defendant Parker separately demurred to it upon the ground of misjoinder of parties defendant, and that several causes of action were improperly united, and upon other grounds. The demurrer was sustained as to all the defendants, and we think the ruling correct.

In actions for malicious prosecution, it must be alleged that the prosecution is at an end, either by alleging that defendant was acquitted of the charge, or by alleging facts showing the legal termination of the prosecution complained of, in favor of defendant, prior to the commencement of the action. 1 Chit. Pl. p. 680; Newell, Mal. Pros. p. 327, § 1; Holliday v. Holliday, 123 Cal. 31, 55 Pac. 703; Hibbing v. Hyde, 50 Cal. 206. The rule as above stated has always prevailed both in England and in this country. That it is a necessary rule, founded upon reason, is apparent to the legal mind. Proceedings in courts having jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter must be shielded from collateral attack. And in all cases where such proceedings have been regularly taken against a party, and sustained by the court in which it is pending, it is conclusively presumed, when collaterally assailed, to have been regular and valid, although in fact it may have been erroneous. If the rule were otherwise, the judgments of courts would have no efficacy, as they would be subject to impeachment wherever an attempt was made to enforce them, and would leave disputes between parties forever unsettled. Therefore, in this case the complaint alleging and showing that the plaintiff was legally examined and held to answer by a justice having jurisdiction of the person, and the right to examine into the question as to the probability of his guilt or innocence of the crimes charged against him, and that the district attorney of the county, being the person in whom the law has vested the power and duty of filing informations, has filed such informations in the superior court having proper jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it must, in the face of the demurrer, be conclusively presumed that the informations are still pending, unless it is made to appear by direct averment, or by a statement of facts which show the necessary legal conclusion, that the prosecution has finally ended and terminated in favor of plaintiff. There is no allegation that the plaintiff was acquitted of the charges contained in the informations. It might have been alleged that he was discharged by an order of the court in which the prosecutions were pending, but this was not done. It is not even alleged that he was discharged by any order of any court. The statement is that "he was discharged from custody and the informations dismissed by Hon. Joseph H. Budd, judge of the said superior court." There is no allegation that Joseph H. Budd is or was the judge of the superior court in which the informations were pending, but, even if it were so alleged, the judge, acting as an individual, and not in court, could not discharge the plaintiff or dismiss the informations. The powers of a superior judge at chambers are enumerated in the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 166), and the authority to discharge a defendant or to dismiss an information is not among them. The general rule is that all judicial business must be transacted in court, and the authority to transact such business out of court is exceptional, and does not exist unless expressly authorized by statute. Larco v. Casaneuava, 30 Cal. 565; Norwood v. Kenfield, 34 Cal. 332; Loomis v. Andrews, 49 Cal. 240. The court may of its own motion order an indictment or an action to be dismissed. Pen. Code, § 1385. But in cases of felony such discharge is not a bar to another prosecution. Id. §§ 1387, 999. The court may also direct another information to be filed. Id. § 997. If it had been alleged that the information was dismissed by the court, the facts would have to be alleged in such manner as to show that the dismissal was an end of the prosecution. It is an elementary rule that the allegations of a pleading will be most strongly construed against the pleader. In no case can the court, in face of a demurrer, presume any facts to exist except such as are stated in the complaint. If the plaintiff in this case was in fact discharged by an order of the superior court of San Joaquin county, and the order was such as to end and finally determine the prosecutions under the informations, he could have so alleged in his complaint. He has not done so under the law as we understand it. It becomes unnecessary to consider any other questions in the case. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 23, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—LIMITATIONS.

A first mortgage cannot renew his mortgage note, and thereby extend limitations so as to affect the second mortgage; but the latter may take advantage of limitations on the first mortgage debt, though the debtor does not.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Ventura county.

Foreclosure action by the California Bank and others against J. Marion Brooks and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. S. Chapman and F. M. Parter, for appellants. Blackstock & Ewing and J. M. Brooks, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. The complaint avers that on the 12th day of March, 1891, J. Marion Brooks made a promissory note to one Weldon, for the California Bank, in the sum of $1,457; that prior to that time Brooks owed William Collins & Sons about $4,500, evidenced by a promissory note for $3,000, dated December 18, 1889, and due one year after date, and by a note for $350, dated February 7, 1891, payable 60 days after date; also, that on the 12th day of March, 1891, the indebtedness of Brooks to William Collins & Sons was secured by conveyance of certain real property by Brooks to said William Collins & Sons. On the same day Brooks executed to Weldon an instrument in writing by which it was, in substance, agreed that said property should be held by Collins to secure the debt due to the bank as well, and that Weldon might at any time pay the debt due to Collins, and then should be entitled to a transfer of the security to himself. To this agreement Collins assented in writing, accepting the obligations thereby imposed. On the 30th day of March, 1891, it is averred, Brooks executed to Weldon a mortgage on certain property, subject to the claim of William Collins & Sons. The mortgage is set out at large in the complaint. Assignments from Weldon to plaintiff Witmer are alleged, and also that Witmer holds the note and mortgage for the plaintiff bank. It is then charged that on the 13th of February, 1894, William Collins & Sons surrendered to the said J. Marion Brooks the promissory note for $3,000, and took in satisfaction and discharge thereof two other promissory notes, one dated February 3, 1894, and the other February 13, 1894, each bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and payable one year after date. It is then alleged that "by reason of the transactions aforesaid the plaintiffs have a prior lien upon the remainder of the property in the hands of said J. S. Collins, as trustee, and conveyed to him by the said J. Marion Brooks, as aforesaid, for the payment of their said debt, and are entitled to payment in preference to the said William Collins & Sons, as to all their claim, except as to the said sum mentioned in the promissory note of February 7, 1891, for three hundred and fifty dollars," etc. Nonpayment of plaintiffs' debt is duly charged, and plaintiffs ask for a judgment decreeing the sale of the property held as security, and from the proceeds then to be paid: First, the note for $350 due Collins; second, the indebtedness from Brooks to plaintiffs; third, the remaining indebtedness of Brooks to William Collins & Sons; fourth, the remainder, if any, after deducting costs, to Brooks.

The answer denies that the $3,000 note was surrendered and discharged for the two notes, and the court so finds. The fact therefore is, as was admitted and found, that the new notes were taken as further evidence of the indebtedness of Brooks to William Collins & Sons, but there was no agreement that the former note should be thereby paid and discharged. Of course, as to plaintiffs, the debt was still evidenced by the first note. The first mortgagee could not renew the note, and thereby extend limitation of statute so as to affect the second mortgagee. He may take advantage of the statute of limitations, although the debtor does not. Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; McCarthy v. White, 21 Cal. 495; Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11; Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493; Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. 185. In the last case above cited the mortgagor was out of the state, and, in reply to the plea of the statute by the second mortgagee in the suit to foreclose the first mortgage, it was contended that, by the terms of the statute itself, it did not run while the debtor was absent. The language of the statute was, "The time of his absence shall not be part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." But the court replied that it had been repeatedly held that, as against subsequent incumbrances, the mortgagor could not by stipulation prolong the time of payment, and said: "We see no difference in principle between a suspension of the running of the statute resulting from an express waiver, and one caused by his voluntary act in absenting himself from the state." The theory upon which judgment was rendered in the trial court for respondent, and the argument of respondent here, really admit the proposition. Why does respondent deem it necessary to contend that the first note was not paid and discharged by his acceptance of the new notes? Only because he finds it necessary to contend that he may still sue on the first note, and because he realizes that he cannot otherwise maintain himself against the plaintiffs. All the rights of William Collins & Sons, as against plaintiffs, depend upon their right to maintain an action on the original note. But the right to maintain an action upon that note became barred December 18, 1894, which was before the commencement of this action. The action was brought to foreclose plaintiffs' mortgage. Perhaps it was unnecessary to set up the entire transactions as they have. All the facts alleged are either admitted or found, except that it is found that the note for $3,000 given by Brooks to William Collins & Sons was not paid by the new notes given for the same indebtedness. As the right of action upon the original note was barred before this action was brought, that was immaterial. Upon the facts alleged and found, plaintiffs are entitled to the relief they demanded. As to Brooks, it was competent to extend the period of the statute by the new notes. The cause is therefore remanded, with directions to set aside the judgment, and to enter in lieu thereof upon the findings a decree directing the sale of the securities, and that the proceeds be applied as follows: First, to the $350 note held by William Collins & Sons; second, to costs, including counsel fee, if any be allowed; third, to pay the indebtedness to plaintiffs; fourth, the remaining indebtedness of William Collins & Sons; fifth, residue, if any, to defendant Brooks.

JOHNSON v. GOODYEAR MIN. CO. et al.

(Sac. 558.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1899.)

CORPORATIONS—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—SPECIAL LIABILITIES AND PRIVILEGES—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

1. A private corporation is a person within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution, forbidding a state to deny to any person or class of persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws.

2. St. 1897, p. 231, requiring all corporations doing business in the state to pay their employes, at least once a month, wages earned during the preceding month, and declaring that violation of such requirements shall entitle an employe to a lien for his wages on the corporation's property, taking precedence of all other liens, except recorded mortgages or deeds of trust, and that such employe shall be entitled to an attachment and a reasonable attorney's fee in case of suit to collect such wages or enforce such lien, and that an unrecorded deed shall be no defense to such suit, is in violation of Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting the legislature from granting to any citizen or class of citizens special privileges or immunities.

3. The act is also in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, since it denies to corporations equal protection of laws.

4. It is also in contravention of Const. art. 1, § 13, subd. 1, as depriving corporations of their property without due process of law by interfering with their freedom to make contracts.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sierra county.

Action by Andrew Johnson against the Goodyear Mining Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed in part.

Frank R. Wehe, for appellants. Frank D. Soward, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This action was brought to recover from the corporation defendant for labor performed by plaintiff and for labor performed by others for defendant corporation, whose claims have been assigned to plaintiff. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and defendants appeal. The case comes here on the judgment roll. The findings show that the defendant corporation, while engaged in business in Sierra county, Cal., became indebted to plaintiff and some 20 others, who, before the commencement of this action, assigned their claims to plaintiff, for labor performed by the month at the instance of defendant corporation in its quartz mine in said county, and the same has not been paid; that $400 is a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed to plaintiff for the prosecution of the action. As conclusions of law the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment against defendant corporation for the sum of $5,039.57 and for $400 attorneys' fees, and that the same is a first lien upon all the property described in the complaint, consisting of certain real estate, mining claims, and personal property consisting of mining materials, tools, engines, cars, wood, lumber, merchandise for mining, etc., and that all the said property, or so much thereof as might be necessary, be sold to pay the plaintiff's judgment, costs, and attorneys' fees. Judgment was accordingly entered. The action was brought to recover monthly wages and attorney's fees, and to have the amount declared a lien upon the property of the defendant corporation, under an act approved March 29, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 231). As the constitutionality of the act is the main question in controversy here, it will be necessary to give the sections of the act herein discussed in full. The sections material are as follows:

"Section 1. Every corporation doing business in this state shall pay, at least once a month, each and every employee employed by such corporation, in transacting or carrying on its business, or in the performance of labor for it, the wages earned by such employee during the preceding month; provided, however, that if at the time of payment any employee shall be absent, or not engaged in his usual employment, he shall be entitled to said payment at any time thereafter upon demand.

"Sec. 2. A violation of any of the provisions of section one of this act shall entitle each of the said employees to a lien on all the property of said corporation for the amount of their wages, which lien shall take preference over all other liens, except duly recorded mortgages or deeds of trust; and in any action to recover the amount of such wages, or to enforce said lien, the plaintiff shall be entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, and which shall form part of the judgment in said action, and shall also be entitled to an attachment against said property. An unrecorded deed shall be no defense to such actions.

"Sec. 3. That on the trial of any action against such corporation for a violation of the provisions of this act, such corporation shall not be allowed to set up any defense for a failure to pay monthly any employee engaged in transacting or carrying on its business the wages earned by such employee during the preceding month, other than the fact that such wages were not earned, except a valid assignment of such wages, a set-off or counterclaim against the same, or the absence of such employee from his usual employment at the time of the payment of the wages so earned by him."

"Sec. 5. No corporation shall require, and no employee of such corporation shall make, any agreement to accept wages at longer periods than as provided in this act as a condition of employment.

"Sec. 6. All wages earned by any employee engaged in the service of any corporation in this state shall be paid in lawful moneys of the United States, or in checks negotiable at face value on demand.

"Sec. 7. Any corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be subject to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or less than fifty dollars, for each violation, the same to be imposed by any court in this state having jurisdiction of offenses in which the penalty does not exceed a fine of one hundred dollars; said fine to be paid, by the judge or magistrate before whom a recovery may be had under the provisions of this act, into the general fund of the treasury of the county in which said conviction may be had."

The plaintiff claims the benefit of the provisions of said act applicable to this case, and the defendants contest the said provisions and every part of said act as being unconstitutional. The statute is said to contravene the following provisions of the constitution of the state: (1) Subdivision 13, § 1, art. 1: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." (2) Subdivision 21, Id.: "Nor shall any citizen or class of citizens be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." (3) Subdivision 11, Id.: "All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation." (4) Section 25, art. 4, providing that the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in the following cases: "Third. Regulating the practice of courts of justice." "Twenty-Fourth. Authorizing the creation, extension or impairing of liens." "Thirty-Third. In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." (5) Fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States: "Nor shall any state deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." In the decision of this case the constitutionality of the sections of the statute herein set forth is necessarily involved, and it is with a deep sense of the importance of the subject that we enter upon its discussion. We must determine whether the lawmaking power of the state has in this instance gone beyond the limits of the constitution adopted by the people. This is always a question of great delicacy, and one which this court approaches with reluctance, but one in which the duty of the court is plain, and which must be met squarely when presented. The same constitution that lays down the fundamental law of our state and prohibits legislatures from going outside the powers and limitations therein contained, created the courts, and provided that they should stand as the guardians of the people, and lay their restraining hands upon the legislature in all cases where it has plainly violated the provisions of the people's charter of rights.

It will be observed that the act in question applies only to two classes of persons: First, corporations doing business in this state, and not to corporations of any other class; second, to laborers performing labor for such corporations. It does not apply to the thousands of laborers who may be employed by individuals or co-partnerships in the many and varied industries of the state. The word "corporation" in the act means those artificial persons created and existing under the laws of this or some other state; but the word "corporation," as to the rights of defendants, must be treated as though it means the name of all the individuals who are members of the corporation. It has long been settled that the word "person," within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, applies to a corporation. Douglass v. Steamship Co., 4 Cal. 306; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 248, 27 Pac. 604; Santa Clara Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 118 U. S. 394, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118; Pembina Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 189, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Railway Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 1161, 32 L. Ed. 107; Railway Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666. The rule is admirably stated in the Railway Tax Cases (C. C.) 13 Fed. 743, as follows: "Private corporations are, it is true, artificial persons, but, with the exception of a sole corporation, with which we are not concerned, they consist of aggregations of individuals united for some legitimate business. In this state they are formed under general laws, and the Civil Code provides that they 'may be formed for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves.' Section 286. Any five or more persons may by voluntary association form themselves into a corporation. And, as a matter of fact, nearly all enterprises in this state requiring for their execution an expenditure of large capital are undertaken by corporations. It would be a most singular result if a constitutional provision intended for the protection of every person against partial and discriminating legislation by the states should cease to exert such protection the moment the person becomes a member of a corporation. We cannot accept such a conclusion. On the contrary, we think it is well established by numerous adjudications of the supreme courts of the several states that whenever a provision of the constitution or of a law guaranties to persons the enjoyment of property, or affords to them means for its protection, or prohibits legislation injuriously affecting it, the benefits of the provision extend to corporations, and that the courts will always look beyond the name of the artificial being to the individuals whom it represents." The case was afterwards taken to the supreme court of the United States (116 U. S. 138, 6 Sup. Ct. 317, 29 L. Ed. 589), and on the opening of court, before argument, the chief justice said: "The court does not wish to hear argument on the question whether the provision in the fourteenth amendment to the constitution which forbids a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws applies to these corporations. We are all of opinion that it does." In discussing the provisions of the statute in question it will, therefore, be regarded as settled that the word "corporation" refers to the members who constitute the corporation, and that the rights of a corporation are to be measured by the same laws as the rights of a person. The law should be made for all alike,—for the rich as well as the poor, for the corporation as well as the laborer. In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations (6th Ed. p. 483) it is said: "But every one has a right to demand that he be governed by general rules; and a special statute which, without his consent, singles his case out as one to be regulated by a different law from that which is applied in all similar cases, would not be legitimate legislation, but would be such an arbitrary mandate as is not within the province of free governments. Those who make the laws are to govern by promulgated established laws, not to be varied in particular cases, but to have one rule for rich and poor, for the favorite at court and the countryman at plow. This is a maxim in constitutional law, and by it we may test the authority and binding force of legislative enactments." In Wally's Heirs v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, it is said: "The rights of every individual must stand or fall by the same rule or law that governs every other member of the body politic, or land, under similar circumstances; and every partial or private law which directly proposes to destroy or affect individual rights, or does the same thing by affording remedies leading to similar consequences, is unconstitutional and void. Were it otherwise, odious individuals and corporations would be governed by one law, the mass of the community and those who made the law by another, whereas the like general law affecting the whole community equally could not have been passed." Applying these principles to this act, it is clearly unconstitutional. It gives a first lien to laborers for the amount due them from corporations doing business in this state upon all the real and personal property of such corporations, and does not even require any description of the property, or notice in any manner, in order to make such lien valid. It seems to give the laborer the right to an attachment against the property of the corporation without requiring him to make the affidavit and file the undertaking required of all other persons in order to procure such attachment. It does not give this lien to any other class of laborers. The thousands of laborers for individuals or co-partnerships in the like employment do not have the benefit of it. The laborer toiling at the same kind of labor felling the forest, tilling the soil, or digging in the bowels of the earth, has no such lien if he is not working for a corporation doing business in this state. The lien attaches to the property of such corporation, but not to the property of an individual under precisely the same circumstances. Under general law liens are given to all mechanics, artisans, laborers, or material men, and against all persons and corporations. Under the present statute a lien is given to laborers performing labor for the particular corporations named. All other persons in the state, after obtaining an ordinary money judgment, must enforce it by the writ of execution; but laborers for such corporations under this statute have the right to have the court declare the amount found due them a lien on all the property of the corporation, which shall take preference over all other liens except recorded mortgages and deeds of trust. The grocer who, perhaps, has furnished the corporation the food with which the laborer has fed his wife and children may have attached the property of the corporation for the purpose of securing himself, but the laborer's lien by the mighty hand of this statute at once sweeps it away. The material man or contractor who has furnished the material for or constructed a building for the corporation, and who has filed his notice of lien as provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, and who may have secured a judgment thereon, must stand by and see his lien destroyed by a decree of court in favor of laborers who performed labor for the corporation since his lien attached. The judgment creditor who has procured a judgment and had it regularly docketed, and who is resting securely under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state making his judgment a lien upon all the real estate of the judgment debtor, is surprised to find his lien destroyed by a decree in favor of one who has performed labor for the corporation long since his lien attached. The corporation may have delivered a large amount of personal property by way of pledge to secure a loan, and the money may have been used in paying the laborers employed by the corporation; and yet under this statute the court must declare the amount due laborers a prior lien as against the pledgee who has actual possession of the property pledged. The statute gives the laborer a right, in case he recovers judgment, to recover attorneys' fees, which become a part of the judgment. No other class of laborers or persons are given the right to recover attorney's fees except by virtue of a contract or by virtue of a general statute. The corporation is prohibited from setting up any defense to the action except some two or three. Matters which might be pleaded as a defense by all other persons in the state are not allowed to be so pleaded by the corporation. If the legislature could deprive the corporation of some of the defenses which other litigants on like terms are allowed, it could, by a Draconian edict, deprive it of all of them, and say at once that the corporation should make no defense whatever to the action. The corporation and the laborer are prohibited from making any contract whereby wages are to become due for a longer period than one month as a condition of employment, or by which the laborer is to be paid in anything except money or negotiable checks. The working man of intelligence is treated as an imbecile. Being over 21 years of age, and not a lunatic or insane, he is deprived of the right to make a contract as to the time when his wages shall become due. Being of sound mind, and knowing the value of a horse, he is not allowed to make an agreement with the corporation that he will work 60 days and take the horse in payment.

Business might be such that a corporation could not possibly pay wages without getting laborers who were willing to wait for their wages until the corporation could get money with which to pay them by marketing its products. The laborer might be interested in the corporation, or for some reason willing to wait until the corporation could pay him. Yet the parties, being able to contract and willing to contract, and desiring for the good of each other to contract, are by this statute forbidden to do so. Not only this, but the corporation shall be subject to a fine of not less than $50 for each violation of the statute. A corporation employing 1,000 men, and sued by each, could not defend the suits without being limited in its defense to those named in the statute, and being subject to a reasonable attorney's fee in each case. In case it made a contract with the 1,000 men by which they agreed to work for it 3 months for $100 each, they could bring suit, and recover, before the end of the 3 months, and each recover an attorney's fee, making 1,000 attorney's fees, and the corporation would be subject to 1,000 fines of $100 each, making the modest sum of $100,000 in fines; or perhaps the magistrate might, in his discretion, make the fine $50 in each case, and thus reduce it to $50,000. We might enumerate many other infirmities in the statute, but the above are sufficient to destroy it.

It is probably unnecessary in this opinion to discuss separately the constitutional objections herein briefly pointed out. In Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 275, 24 Pac. 757, 9 L. R. A. 482, it appeared that the petitioner had been arrested for the violation of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles making it a misdemeanor for any contractor to make any agreement to pay any laborer for any labor in excess of eight hours in any one day. This court, in discharging the petitioner, said: "It is claimed in support of the petition that this ordinance was unconstitutional and void. We think this objection is well taken. It is simply an attempt to prevent certain parties from employing others in a lawful business, and paying them for their services, and is a direct infringement of the right of such persons to make and enforce their contracts. If the services to be performed were unlawful, or against public policy, or the employment were such as might be unfit for certain persons,—as, for example, females or infants,—the ordinance might be upheld as a sanitary or police regulation; but we cannot conceive of any theory upon which a city could be justified in making it a misdemeanor for one of its citizens to contract with another for services to be rendered because the contract is that he shall work more than a limited number of hours per day." Statutes similar to the one under discussion have been frequently passed by the legislatures of sister states, and as frequently declared unconstitutional by the courts. The legislature of Pennsylvania, in June, 1881, passed what was known as the "Store-Order Act," and under its provisions all laborers employed by firms, corporations, or persons engaged in the business of manufacturing must be paid in cash, and can make no agreement by which their labor shall be paid for in any goods or store orders. The supreme court of the state in Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. St. 437, 6 Atl. 354, held the act unconstitutional, and in the opinion said: "The first, second, third, and fourth sections of the act of June 29, 1881, are utterly unconstitutional and void, inasmuch as by them an attempt has been made by the legislature to do what in this country cannot be done; that is, to prevent persons who are sui juris from making their own contracts. The act is an infringement alike of the right of the employer and the employé. More than that, it is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage, which is not only degrading to his manhood, but subversive of his rights as a citizen of the United States. He may sell his labor for what he thinks best,—whether money or goods,—just as his employer may sell his iron or coal; and any and every law that proposes to prevent him from so doing is an infringement of his constitutional privileges, and consequently vicious and void." In 1887 the legislature of the state of West Virginia passed an act declaring that all persons engaged in mining coal or other minerals, or in manufacturing them, should not issue for the payment of labor certain orders therein described. The supreme court of the state in State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, 6 L. R. A. 621, declared the law unconstitutional, and in the opinion said: "The property which every man has in his own labor, as it is the original foundation of all other property, so it is the most sacred and inviolable. The patrimony of the poor man lies in the strength and dexterity of his own hands; and to hinder him from employing these in what manner he may think proper, without injury to his neighbor, is a plain violation of this most sacred property. It is equally an encroachment both upon the just liberty and rights of the workman and his employer, or those who might be disposed to employ him, for the legislature to interfere with the freedom of contract between them, as such interference hinders the one from working at what he thinks proper, and at the same time prevents the other from employing whom he chooses. * * * But we are aware of no well-considered case in which a statute has been upheld that undertook to regulate the dealings between employer and employé, even in this class of occupations. Much less in cases that are not impressed with a public trust or duty." This case was immediately followed by State v. Fire Creek Coal & Coke Co., 33 W. Va. 188, 10 S. E. 288, 6 L. R. A. 359, in which, on the same reasoning, a statute of the state making it unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation engaged in mining or manufacturing to sell goods to any employé at a greater per cent. profit than like goods are sold to others, was held unconstitutional. In the opinion it is said: "That it is an attempt to do for private citizens, under no physical or mental disabilities, what they can best do for themselves, is apparent. It selects miners and manufacturers as a class, and denies to them privileges which are not only proper and legitimate in themselves, but also to some extent necessary and unavoidable in the conduct of business; privileges which concern private affairs solely, and which are enjoyed by all other classes of citizens." The general assembly of Massachusetts passed an act providing that no employer should impose a fine upon or withhold the wages of an employé engaged in weaving for imperfections that may arise during the process of weaving. This act was pronounced unconstitutional in an able opinion of the supreme court of the state. Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 28 N. E. 1126, 14 L. R. A. 325. The Revised Statutes of Missouri in 1889 made it unlawful for any corporation, firm, or person engaged in mining to issue in payment of wages any order or check payable otherwise than in money, unless the same was negotiable or redeemable at its face value in cash or goods, at the option of the holder. The supreme court of the state in State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 22 S. W. 350, 21 L. R. A. 789, held the statute unconstitutional. The legislature of the state of Illinois in 1883 passed a statute requiring that owners and operators of coal mines in the state should weigh the coal at the mines, and that all contracts with laborers by which the weighing of coal at the mines shall be dispensed with shall be void. The statute was held unconstitutional in Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 295, 7 N. E. 631. The same rule has been followed by the same court in regard to similar statutes as to "truck stores." Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 31 N. E. 395, 16 L. R. A. 492. As to an act for the weekly payment of wages by corporations, see Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 240. The legislature of Texas provided by statute that a railroad company refusing to pay an employé within 15 days after demand shall be liable to such employé in a sum equal to 20 per cent. on the amount due. The statute was held unconstitutional. Railway Co. v. Wilson (Tex. App.) 19 S. W. 910. In the opinion it is said: "If the legislature desires to interfere at all in the enforcement of labor claims, it must do so by laws equal in their operation, and protecting alike the interest of the employer and employé, for the law knows no favorites." The supreme court of Nebraska in Railroad Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, held unconstitutional a statute of 1867 giving to owners of live stock double the value of such property injured or destroyed on a railroad track. In Michigan a statute was passed in 1885 authorizing the taxing of an attorney's fee of $25 in actions against a railroad company for damages for cattle killed, and the supreme court of the state held it unconstitutional. Wilder v. Railway Co., 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289. And the supreme court of Arkansas held a similar statute of that state unconstitutional (Railway Co. v. Williams, 49 Ark. 492, 5 S. W. 883); and the same ruling was made on a similar statute by the supreme court of the state of Washington (Joliffe v. Brown, 14 Wash. 155, 44 Pac. 149), and by the supreme court of Ohio (Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 12-24, 41 N. E. 263, 29 L. R. A. 386). Cases almost without number could be cited to the same general effect. Among others, see Durkee v. City of Janesville, 28 Wis. 464; Chair Co. v. Runnels, 77 Mich. 104, 43 N. W. 1006; Railroad Co. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 193; Railroad Co. v. Moss, 60 Miss. 641-652; Railway Co. v. Outcalt, 2 Colo. App. 395, 31 Pac. 177.

This court in bank held that a statute of the state prohibiting bakers from following their vocation between the hours of 6 o'clock p. m. on Saturday and 6 o'clock p. m. on Sunday was a special law, and void. Ex parte Westerfield, 55 Cal. 551. And the same was held as to a similar statute in relation to barbers. Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 469, 44 Pac. 803. The question is very ably considered, and would seem to be finally put to rest, by the supreme court of the United States in Railway Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666. The statute of the state of Texas allowing owners of stock killed by a railway corporation $10 attorney's fees as additional costs was held unconstitutional. In the opinion it is said: "The act singles out a certain class of debtors, and punishes them, when for like delinquencies it punishes no others. They are not treated as other debtors, or equally with other debtors. They cannot appeal to the courts as other litigants, under like conditions, and with like protection. If litigation terminates adversely to them, they are mulcted in the attorney's fees of the successful plaintiff; if it terminates in their favor, they recover no attorney's fees. * * * They do not stand equal before the law. They do not receive its equal protection." The reasoning of the highest court in the land in the case cited applies to this case. There is no reason why a different rule as to defenses that may be pleaded and proven and as to the nature of the lien of a judgment should obtain against a corporation than that which applies to other litigants. In Cullen v. Water Co., 113 Cal. 503, 39 Pac. 769, and 45 Pac. 822, 1047, it was held that a part of the fourth section of the act generally known as the "Wright Act," which provided that in a proceeding to confirm the organization and bonds of an irrigation district "a motion for a new trial must be made upon the minutes of the court," was a special law regulating the practice of courts of justice, and unconstitutional. In City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604, it was held that section 870 of the municipal corporation act of 1883, requiring cities of the fifth and sixth classes to make an effort to agree before instituting condemnation proceedings, was unconstitutional. And so in the late case of the City of Tulare v. Hevren (filed Sept. 29, 1899), 58 Pac. 530, this court held that that portion of the general act of the state in regard to municipal corporations, by which it is provided that in municipal corporations of the fifth class courts shall take judicial notice of all ordinances of the municipality, was unconstitutional. It is claimed that corporations are a class, and that classifications can be made, and that a law is not unconstitutional if it affects all of a class. While this is true, yet the classification must be founded upon differences either defined by the constitution or natural, or which will suggest a reason which might naturally be held to justify the diversity of legislation. Darcy v. City of San Jose, 104 Cal. 645, 38 Pac. 500; State v. Hammer, 42 N. J. Law, 439; Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 484. Arbitrary selection can never be justified by calling it classification. Railway Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 159, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666. In this case there can be no reason why a corporation doing business in this state should have its property subjected to a lien unless the property of other persons in the state under like circumstances is subjected to the same kind of a lien; or why such corporations should be prohibited from making defenses which all other persons in the state may make; or why such corporations should pay attorneys' fees or fines in an ordinary action at law, while all other persons under like circumstances are exempt from such attorneys' fees and fines; or why such corporation cannot create valid liens upon its property other than by a deed or mortgage duly recorded, while all other persons in the state may do so; or why such corporations shall be denied the privilege of making a contract as to the manner of payment of its employes, while all other persons in the state who are over 21 years of age, and not incompetent, may do so; or why laborers cannot make a valid contract as to the time when their wages shall become due, or the kind of property or money in which they shall be paid. It is said that, corporations being the creatures of the state, and deriving their powers from their charters, the same power that created them may alter or amend their charters, or deprive them of rights originally given them. This is true as to certain purposes, but the legislature cannot, after creating a corporation, and while it exists, deprive it of the rights guaranteed to it by the federal constitution, nor deprive it of its right to resort to the courts of law, nor take its property without due process of law, nor subject it to unequal and oppressive burdens, nor deprive it of the equal protection of the laws. Railroad Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499, 24 L. Ed. 836; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. Ed. 490; Railroad Tax Cases (C. C.) 13 Fed. 754, 755; Detroit v. Detroit & H. P. R. Co., 43 Mich. 140-147, 5 N. W. 275.

But the act in question applies not only to the corporations existing under the laws of this state, but to all other corporations doing business in this state, and in no wise indebted to the state for their charters. Surely, the legislature of this state could not alter, amend, or repeal the charter of a corporation existing under the laws of another state. Counsel for respondent states that similar statutes have been upheld in Shaffer v. Mining Co., 55 Md. 74, Peel Splint Coal Co. v. State (W. Va.) 15 S. E. 1000, and Hancock v. Yaden, 121 Ind. 365, 23 N. E. 253, 6 L. R. A. 576. The statute upheld in Shaffer v. Mining Co. was one which provided that every corporation engaged in manufacturing, or in operating a railroad, in a certain county, and employing 10 hands or more, should pay its employes the full amount of their wages in legal tender money of the United States, and that every contract for the payment of such wages in any other manner should be null and void. The ground upon which the act was upheld was that the legislature had the right to alter or amend the corporate charter. It is evident, in view of the authorities hereinbefore cited, that the ruling upon such ground was clearly incorrect. The decision cannot be regarded as of much value as a contribution to jurisprudence, and an examination of the authorities therein cited does not support it. The case of Peel Splint Coal Co. v. State upheld the validity of two statutes of West Virginia, one prohibiting the payment of employes in paper redeemable otherwise than in lawful money, and the other prescribing a certain method for weighing coal at the mouth of a mine. The court consisted of four judges, and two of the four can affirm a judgment. The judgment was affirmed by two judges, and two dissented. The opinion of the two affirming the judgment, while lengthy, is not convincing. The decision appears to have been based upon practically the same reasoning as the Maryland case,—that, the corporation being a creature of the legislature, and having a license under the state, the legislature could practically deprive it of any rights. In view of the fact that the opinion is in direct conflict with the two previous decisions of the same state, and is the opinion of two judges as against two others of the same court, it cannot have weight here. It seems to us that any one reading the able dissenting opinions of Judge English and Judge Brannon would be satisfied that the decision is wrong. Judge Brannon, in his dissenting opinion, says: "If, upon the suggestion of a supposed or real evil, always incident to the transaction of all business, the legislature can restrict lawful contracts in private business, government becomes not simply paternal but oppressive and tyrannical. The 'Scrip Act' would prevent the farmer, brick maker, or coal operator from giving to his hands for wages an order to any one for sugar, coffee, flour, or meat,—a great reversal in the right of contracts as used time out of mind." Hancock v. Yaden turned on the validity of a statute of Indiana which forbade the execution of contracts waiving the payment of wages in money. The court sustained the law, and the decision is the most direct authority in favor of plaintiff's contention of any he has cited. There is no authority cited in the opinion upon which it can legally stand. The court sustained the law upon the ground "that it protected and maintained the medium of payment established by the sovereign power of the nation." Even if this be so, it is self-evident that the legislature, in passing the act, did not have in mind the protection of the coinage. The policy of the law in protecting the coin of the country would justify stringent laws against counterfeiting or debasing it, but certainly could not justify a law that precludes persons from agreeing to receive payment of their debts in anything but money. Since the submission of this case, our attention has also been called by counsel for plaintiff to a decision of the circuit court of the United States for Ninth circuit, Northern California, in the case of Skinner v. Mining Co. (filed Sept. 6, 1899) 96 Fed. 735, in which this very statute was upheld. While we have the greatest respect for the able judge who wrote the opinion, yet it is not binding on us as a precedent, and the reasoning therein does not convince us of its correctness, nor, in our opinion, do the authorities therein cited support it. The learned judge refers to the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Tennessee (C. C.) 19 Fed. 679. In that case the circuit court of the United States held unconstitutional an act of the legislature of the state of Tennessee creating a railroad commission, and making certain discrimination against railroads. In the opinion it is said: "Their general object [referring to the provisions of the fourteenth amendment] is to secure to all citizens in like circumstances an equality of legal rights, and to protect minorities and other interests not strong enough to protect themselves against the aggressions of the majority to restrain all injurious legislation discriminating against persons and property; * * * to compel an equal distribution of the burdens of government upon every citizen, natural or corporate, coming fairly within the purview of the law; and to give to every one an equal right to invoke the remedies prescribed by law for the redress of wrongs done either to his person, reputation, or property." In the opinion of the learned judge it is further stated that the act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 195), similar to the statute in question, relating to the payment of wages of laborers by corporations, has been construed in Keener v. Irrigation Co., 110 Cal. 627, 43 Pac. 14, and Ackley v. Mining Co., 112 Cal. 42, 44 Pac. 330, and that the act in question is directed to the same end as the statute of 1891. The act was under consideration, but not passed upon as to its constitutionality, in either case. In each case it was held that the laborers were entitled to an ordinary judgment such as is granted to other litigants, and in each of the cases the judgment of the lower court as to counsel fees and as to the judgment being declared a lien was reversed. In the case in 110 Cal. and 43 Pac. it is said in conclusion of the opinion: "That portion of the judgment awarding counsel fees, and declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien upon the property of the defendant, and directing a sale of such property, is reversed." And in the case in 112 Cal. and 44 Pac. the same ruling was made and the same language used in reversing the portion of the judgment as to counsel fees and declaring the judgment a lien. The act of 1891 has, however, by this court in bank, been held unconstitutional, as special legislation in favor of a class, and making an arbitrary classification. Slocum v. Irrigation Co., 122 Cal. 555, 55 Pac. 403.

The court properly overruled the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. The allegation as to the assignment of the several causes of action, prior to the time of the commencement of the action, to plaintiff, was sufficient when attacked by general demurrer. That portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant corporation for $5,039.57, with costs, should be affirmed. The portion awarding the plaintiff $400 attorney's fees, and declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien upon the property of defendant corporation, and to have a commissioner appointed to sell the property, should be reversed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, that portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant corporation for $5,039.57, with costs, is affirmed. The portion awarding the plaintiff $400 attorney's fees, and declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a lien upon the property of defendant corporation, and to have a commissioner appointed to sell the property, is reversed.

BARTHE v. ROGERS. (S. F. 1,793.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 24, 1899.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS—BURDEN OF PROOF—NONSUIT.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1500, providing that the holder of a claim against the estate of a deceased person cannot maintain an action thereon unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator, a holder of such a claim can recover only such portion thereof against the estate as has been so presented for allowance and rejected.

2. The burden of proof is on the claimant to establish a claim against a decedent's estate; and, if his evidence fails, defendant is entitled to submit the case on claimant's testimony, rather than move for a nonsuit.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Proceeding by O. Barthe against Josephine Rogers, administratrix, etc., to establish a claim against the estate of one Marshall, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

John H. Durst, for appellant. A. Ruef, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff presented a claim to the defendant against the estate of her intestate, which was rejected by her, and thereupon brought the present action to establish the same. Judgment was rendered in his favor, and the defendant has appealed.

The claim presented by the plaintiff was for services of divers kinds rendered the deceased at different times from October, 1893, to the date of her death, March 29, 1897, and expenses incurred therein, and was made up of 14 separate items, to each of which a specific value was fixed, amounting in the aggregate to $778. In the complaint herein the plaintiff sets forth a copy of the claim so presented by him, and seeks to recover upon an indebtedness of $778 for services rendered the deceased at her request within two years before her death, and for money laid out and expended at her request. At the trial he disclaimed all right of recovery for any services except such as were rendered within two years prior to the death of the intestate, and the court allowed him $30 a month for that period, and found that the decedent was indebted to him in the sum of $720 "for services rendered to her by plaintiff within two years prior to her said death, at her request," and entered judgment accordingly. The appeal herein is maintained upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain this finding of the court, and that the judgment was rendered upon a different cause of action from that stated in the claim which was presented to the defendant.

Of the 14 items of which the plaintiff made up the claim which he presented to the defendant, 7 were for "expenses and services" in making trips from San Francisco to various parts of the state at request of deceased, for which $158 was claimed; and one item of $12 was claimed for "accompanying Mrs. Marshall six trips to Berkeley and San Leandro." There is no evidence in the record that the plaintiff ever made a trip in behalf of the deceased to any part of the state, and the only evidence in support of his claim for "accompanying" her to any place outside of San Francisco is that given by the witness Danner, who testified: "I knew that Barthe went different places in the country with her." Another item in the claim as presented is for $50 for "expenses and services about fifty trips to office of A. Ruef, attorney, and consultation with him on behalf of deceased, with her." The only evidence bearing on this item is that given by Mrs. Stencil, who testified that the deceased told her that Barthe took her once to some lawyer. One of the items in the claim presented is for $200 for "services rendered to deceased four or five times per week from October, 1893, to April, 1895." As she died March 29, 1897, the plaintiff could recover for only such services under this item as were rendered during the last two days in March, 1895. Another item in the claim as presented was $50 for "expenses and services in attending to various negotiations relating to sale of her real property, at her request." There is no evidence in the record tending to show that any such services were rendered.

The provision in section 1500, Code Civ. Proc., that the holder of a claim against the estate of a deceased person cannot maintain an action thereon unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator, is equivalent to a declaration that he cannot maintain an action upon any claim that he has not first presented for allowance, and that, in any action to establish the validity of a claim which has been presented and rejected, "he can recover only upon the claim which has been so presented and rejected, and is not entitled in that action to recover against the estate for any other cause of action." Lichtenberg v. McGlynn, 105 Cal. 45, 38 Pac. 541. In the present case the plaintiff's claim, as presented to the administratrix, was for certain specified services, for which he demanded certain specific compensation. At the trial he offered evidence in support of only a portion of these services, and offered no evidence of the particular value of such services. In the claim which he presented, his demand for compensation for those services of which he offered evidence was less than one-half of the amount for which the court gave him judgment; and the basis of computation upon which the court rendered its decision, viz. "thirty dollars a month for two years," had no foundation in the claim as presented. It may be added that the evidence of services rendered by him to the decedent within two years of her death does not equal the extent of services stated by him in his claim.

The contention of the respondent that the defendant should have moved for a nonsuit, rather than submit the case upon the plaintiff's testimony, is without merit. The plaintiff was not entitled to recover unless he produced evidence in support of his claim, and the burden was upon him to establish the claim which had been rejected. If his evidence failed in this respect, the defendant was entitled to ask for a judgment in her behalf. As was said in Lichtenberg v. McGlynn, supra: "It may be that the failure to make greater proof results from the statutory inability of the plaintiff to testify in his own behalf, but this does not relieve him from the necessity of producing sufficient evidence to establish his cause of action. His incompetency to testify may be his misfortune, but the defendant's obligation is not thereby varied, and she is entitled to demand such proof before she can be called upon to pay to the plaintiff the money which is in her hands as trustee for the beneficiaries of her intestate."

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1899.)
COUNTIES—SUPERVISORS — QUALIFICATION — ELECTION.

Const. art. 2, § 1, provides that every male citizen of the United States who shall have been resident of the state for one year next preceding an election, of the county ninety days, and of the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote. Act April 1, 1897, § 15 (St. 1897, p. 455), declares that each member of the board of supervisors must be an elector of the district which he represents, and must have been such elector for at least one year immediately preceding his election. Held, that an elector who has resided in the district he was elected to represent for one year immediately preceding his election as supervisor was eligible to the office, though he was not entitled to vote at such election for the reason that his name has not been entered on the great register of the county as directed by Pol. Code, § 1094.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alpine county.

Proceeding by Lewis Bergevin against H. W. Curtz contesting the latter's right to hold the office of supervisor. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

P. M. Packard and Wood & Levinsky, for appellant. W. M. Thornburg, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Appellant was duly elected to the office of supervisor of supervisor district No. 1 of Alpine county at the November election, 1898. This is a proceeding by respondent, as an elector, contesting the right of appellant to hold said office solely on the ground that at the time of the election he was not eligible thereto. The court below rendered judgment against appellant, declaring that at the time of said election he was ineligible to said office, and by its decree annulled and set aside the election. The defendant has appealed from the judgment, and the case is brought here on the judgment roll.

It appears from the findings that appellant is a natural-born citizen of the United States, 27 years of age; that he has resided in the state of California all his life, in the county of Alpine ever since June, 1894, and in precinct No. 1 in superior district No. 1 since the 1st day of July, 1897; that appellant's name appears upon the great register of said county June 21, 1894, in precinct No. 2 in supervisor district No. 2, but that he removed from said last-named precinct and district into precinct and district No. 1 about July 1, 1897; that appellant's name remained upon said great register in precinct 2 and supervisor district 2 of said county until the 3d day of October, 1898, when, at his request, it was canceled upon the said precinct register No. 2, and placed upon the precinct register of precinct No. 1 in said supervisor district No. 1; that on the 8th day of November, 1898, the appellant was a duly-registered voter in said precinct No. 1, supervisor district No. 1, but had only been such since the 3d day of October, 1898, and was not a registered voter in said supervisor district No. 1 for one year next preceding the day of election. The court below, as a conclusion of law from the said findings, adjudged that appellant had not been an elector of district No. 1 for one year immediately preceding his election, and was, therefore, not eligible to the office at the time he was elected. This is the sole question to be determined in the case.

It is provided in section 15 of the county government act of April 1, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 455) that "each member of the board of supervisors must be an elector of the district which he represents, must reside therein during his incumbency, and must have been such elector for at least one year immediately preceding his election." In order to find the meaning and definition of "elector," we must look to the constitution of the state. An elector is a person possessing the qualifications fixed by the constitution. O'Flaherty v. City of Bridgeport, 64 Conn. 161, 29 Atl. 466. It is provided in the constitution (article 2, § 1) that every male citizen of the United States "who shall have been resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he claims his vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law." The findings of the court show that appellant was an elector of the district for which he was elected for more than one year immediately preceding the November election. He had been a resident of the state, county, and precinct for more than one year immediately preceding the election. He possessed all the qualifications of an elector as prescribed by the constitution, and, unless we should hold that he must have possessed some qualification other than that laid down by said instrument, he was, at the time of his election, eligible to the office. We do not think the legislature, even if it attempted to do so, could add any essential to the constitutional definition of an elector. It is settled by the great weight of authority that the legislature has the power to enact reasonable provisions for the purpose of requiring persons who are electors, and who desire to vote, to show that they have the necessary qualifications; as by requiring registration, or requiring an affidavit or oath as to qualifications, as a condition precedent to the right of such electors to exercise the privilege of voting. Such provisions do not add to the qualifications required of electors, nor abridge the right of voting, but are only reasonable regulations for the purpose of ascertaining who are qualified electors, and to prevent persons who are not such electors from voting. These regulations must be reasonable, and must not conflict with the requirements of the constitution.

The legislature has required that all electors, as a condition of the right to vote, shall have their names properly and in due season entered upon the great register of the county. Pol. Code, § 1094. The section provides that in the register shall be entered the names of the qualified electors of the county, and "that any elector who has registered and thereafter moved his residence to another precinct in the same county thirty days before an election may have his registration transferred to such other precinct upon his application." The legislature has made no attempt to change or add to the qualifications of an elector, but has simply provided a means whereby the elector who is entitled to vote may be known by having his name enrolled upon an authentic list. It was said by this court in Webster v. Byrnes, 34 Cal. 276, in discussing the right of a party to vote in a case where his vote was challenged: "The question here is: Is he a qualified elector of the precinct at which he voted, and was his name at the time upon the great register and poll list?" In the case of Welch v. Williams, 96 Cal. 367, 31 Pac. 222, it was said by the chief justice, speaking for the court in bank: "The object of the registration law is to prevent illegal voting by providing, in advance of election, an authentic list of the qualified electors." In the case of Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 362, it is said: "There is a difference between an elector or person legally qualified to vote and a voter. In common parlance they may be used indiscriminately, but, strictly speaking, they are not the same. The voter is the elector who votes,—the elector in the exercise of his franchise or privilege of voting,—and not he who does not vote." In this case the appellant would have been eligible to the office of supervisor of the district for which he was elected if his name had not been on the great register. He could not have voted at the election, and thus would have been deprived of voting for himself, if he so desired; but, having the constitutional qualifications, he was eligible to the office. The court below evidently was of the opinion that one must have his name enrolled upon the great register before he could be an elector, and this because of the reading of section 1083, Pol. Code. That section, after enumerating the constitutional qualifications of a voter, adds: "And whose name shall be enrolled on the great register of such county fifteen days prior to an election shall be a qualified elector," etc. The words "qualified elector" are used in the sense of elector who has the right to vote. It appears plain that the legislature recognized the fact that there might be electors who were not so qualified. The county government act does not provide, as a condition of eligibility to the office of supervisor, that the candidate must have been a qualified elector of the district which he represents for at least one year. We advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with directions to render judgment on the findings in favor of appellant.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with directions to render judgment on the findings in favor of appellant.

In re MEALY et al. (L. A. 587.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1899.)

INVOLUNTARY INSOLVENCY—PETITION—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

1. Under St. 1895, p. 131, § 9, providing that an adjudication of insolvency may be made, on petition of creditors, when a debtor, being insolvent, has made an assignment or transfer of his property with intent to delay, defraud, or hinder his creditors, a complaint failing to allege that a debtor was insolvent when doing said acts does not state a cause of action.

2. Under St. 1895, p. 131, § 9, providing that an adjudication of insolvency may be made, on petition of creditors, when a debtor, "in contemplation of insolvency, has made any payment, * * * or transfer of his property with intent to delay, defraud, or hinder his creditors," a complaint alleging that debtors, "in contemplation of insolvency, have made a payment, and transfer of their property," with such intent, but failing to state when and to whom such payment and transfer were made, does not state a cause of action.

3. Where a bond in involuntary insolvency proceedings is insufficient, because not signed by all of the petitioning creditors, objection to the trial court's jurisdiction to render judgment will not be entertained when made for the first time in the supreme court.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Petition for involuntary insolvency by creditors of A. M. Mealy and Florence Weeks Stetson, partners as A. M. Mealy & Co., debtors. From a judgment rendered for petitioners upon the overruling of a demurrer to the petition, said debtors appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Leonard & Morris and E. R. Annable, for appellants. Tillan & Dunning and Curtis & Curtis, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Involuntary insolvency. The petitioning creditors had judgment by default, upon demurrer to their petition being overruled, adjudging appellants to be insolvent. The appeal is from this judgment. The points urged on the appeal are (1) that the demurrer should have been sustained; and (2) that no sufficient bond was filed.

1. The demurrer was for insufficiency of facts, and on the further ground that the petition is uncertain and unintelligible, in that it does not state when the alleged assignment, sale, or transfer was made, and is ambiguous for like reason, and for the further reason that it does not state to whom said assignment, transfer, sale, or conveyance was made. The allegation of the petition is "that said debtors reside and have their place of business in said county of San Bernardino, and made an assignment, sale, conveyance, and transfer of their estate, property, rights, and credits with intent to delay, defraud, and hinder their creditors; the said debtors, in contemplation of insolvency, have made a payment, and a grant, sale, conveyance, and transfer of their estate, property, rights, and credits." There is no allegation in the petition that the debtors are or were at any time insolvent, nor is there any allegation that they have assigned or transferred all their property, and there is nothing in the petition to show when the alleged assignment took place, or to whom or what property was transferred. So far as appears, the assignment may have been of some property of insignificant value; and it may have been assigned long before the passage of the act, and the debtors may have been solvent when and after they made the assignment. Section 9 of the insolvent act of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 131) provides that an adjudication of insolvency may be made on the petition of five or more creditors. Such petition must set forth "that such person [the debtor] is about to depart from this state, with intent," etc.; "or conceals himself to avoid the service of legal process; or conceals or is removing any of his property," etc. These are grounds for the adjudication, without regard to the solvency of the debtor. The act proceeds: "* * * Or being insolvent, has suffered his property to remain under attachment or legal process for three days; * * * or has made any assignment, gift, sale, conveyance or transfer of his estate, property, rights or credits, with intent to delay, defraud or hinder his creditors." In these enumerated acts of the debtor the adjudication depends upon the fact of his "being insolvent." Without an allegation that he did the acts "being insolvent," there would be no sufficient ground alleged for the proceeding, and the petition in the present case rests in part upon the ground last above stated and is copied from the act. The act proceeds: "* * * Or in contemplation of insolvency, has made any payment, gift, grant, sale, conveyance or transfer of his estate, property, rights or credits." The complaint alleges "that said debtors, in contemplation of insolvency, have made a payment and a grant, sale," etc.; following the language of the statute. There is nothing to show that these transactions were different from those previously alleged, for in neither case is the time when made, the person to whom made, or the property assigned set forth, or any other means of identification stated; and, so far as the petition shows, these latter transactions may have occurred years prior to the filing of the petition. We think the petition should have shown, at least, that the transfer was made since the passage of the insolvency act under which the proceeding was brought, if a date no more definite could have been stated, and should have contained some statement of the payment made or property transferred, and to whom. In re Patton, 110 Cal. 33, 42 Pac. 459, presented a similar question, but is not in point; for the petition there very properly alleged the insolvency of the debtors, and also alleged the time when the transfer was made, to whom made, and the property transferred. The case of In re Close, 106 Cal. 574, 39 Pac. 1067, also relied on by respondents, was where the ground alleged was that the debtor had permitted his property to remain under attachment for over four days, and it was alleged that he was insolvent when the attachment was levied, and had ever since so been, and that he had no other than the attached property. We do not think the petition was sufficient, as against a general demurrer, and certainly was obnoxious to the special demurrer.

2. Appellants make the point that the bond was insufficient, and that the court had no power to enter the judgment, because the filing of the prescribed bond with the petition is jurisdictional. The petition was filed by certain four corporations and two co-partnerships. The bond was signed by two sureties, and by P. M. Daniel, J. M. Johnston, and A. B. Cass. Appellants claim that the signers of the bond must be petitioners. It was held in Re Visalia City Water Co., 119 Cal. 561, 51 Pac. 856, that the "act contemplates the filing of the bond with two sureties and all the petitioning creditors as principals." The bond was therefore insufficient. The objection to the bond is made here for the first time. It was said in Creditors v. Lumber Co., 98 Cal. 318, 33 Pac. 196, where the same objection was made as here, that, "if the undertaking in this case was objectionable, in fairness to the other side the defects should have been pointed out, in order that they might have been remedied." The question is unlike that in Anderson v. Superior Court, 122 Cal. 216, 54 Pac. 829, where there was no bond at all. It is not necessary to decide whether or not the filing of an insufficient bond is jurisdictional, where no objection is made by the debtor to the bond as filed. In the present case there was a bond filed, and, while we think it was insufficient in the particular already pointed out, the defect was waived by failure to make objection to it at the proper time and place. It is advised that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Ex parte KNAPP. (Cr. 597.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1899.)

GAME—PROHIBITING TRANSPORTATION—UNJUST DISCRIMINATION.

1. A county ordinance making it a misdemeanor for one to transport, or offer to transport, from the county, game lawfully taken therein, is an unreasonable interference with the right of private property, and therefore void.

2. A county ordinance prohibiting the transportation of game from the county, which is intended to apply only to persons who are not sportsmen, is void, as an unjust discrimination.

In bank. Application by James Knapp for a writ of habeas corpus. Relator discharged.

V. G. Frost, for petitioner.

TEMPLE, J. This is an application for a discharge from custody made on behalf of James Knapp, who was arrested, tried, and convicted upon a charge of violating an ordinance of the county of Stanislaus. The ordinance declares, in effect, that it shall be a misdemeanor for any one to hunt, kill, or destroy certain game with intent to transport, or to cause the same to be transported, without the county, or to offer the same to any person for the purpose of shipping or carrying the same without the county. It also declares that every railroad or transportation company, their agents and servants, who shall transport such game without the county, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. The prisoner was charged with willfully and unlawfully offering for transportation by Wells, Fargo & Co., from the town of Newman, in Stanislaus county, to San Francisco, two wild ducks which were killed in Stanislaus county.

Serious question has been made as to the power of any county board of supervisors to add either restraints or regulations to the right to take and kill wild game, to those made by the legislature. We do not find it necessary for the purposes of this case to decide that question. If such further restrictions upon the right to kill game may be made by county boards, such regulations must be reasonable, not oppressive to any class, and must not contravene any established policy of the state. Presumably the two ducks were lawfully taken by James Knapp in Stanislaus county. It is not charged that they were hunted or killed for the purpose of being transported without the county, though such fact, if it existed, would not have changed the result. Having taken the game lawfully, and at a time when it is lawful for any one to shoot ducks, the ordinance prohibiting their shipment is an unreasonable interference with the right of private property, and an unnecessary restraint of trade. The statutes of the state in regard to game prohibit the offering for sale of game during the time it is unlawful to kill such game. St. 1897, p. 90. The state regulations upon this particular subject seem complete, and restrict the rights of citizens so far as was necessary to prevent the unlawful killing of game.

It was stated on the argument, substantially, that the ordinance was aimed at "pot hunters." I understand this phrase covers all except sportsmen. Relatively a small part of the community only are sportsmen. A law or ordinance which would discriminate in their favor would not be a proper exercise of the so-called "police power." If that be the manifest or admitted purpose of the ordinance, it is void for that reason, also. The prisoner is discharged.

We concur: VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment on the first ground discussed by Justice TEMPLE. The people of the state being the owner of its wild game, it may be conceded that the state legislature could annex any condition it chose to the privilege of taking it; but a county ordinance forbidding all persons, under penalty, to transport game, lawfully taken, to the place where they desire to use or dispose of it, is violative of the right of private property, as defined and regulated by general law, and necessarily invalid.

In re UPHAM'S ESTATE. (Sac. 650.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1899.)

WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—LAPSED DEVISES AND BEQUESTS—RESIDUARY LEGATEE—BEQUESTS TO CHARITIES—VALIDITY.

1. Civ. Code, §§ 1332, 1333, provide that devises of the residue of testator's real property and residuary bequests of personalty pass all of the testator's property not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. Held, that under such sections both devises and bequests which lapse pass to the residuary legatee.

2. Testator devised the residuum of his estate to the trustees of an orphans' home organized by an unincorporated beneficial association. The purpose of the home was to care for orphan children, of whom it continuously accommodated about 200. The trustees of the home were not incorporated, but formed a continuous board, one-half of whom were elected every two years by the association. Held that, since the home constituted a charity, the gift was not void for want of trustees capable of taking the property, since, if the trustees were not capable of taking, the charity would not fail for that reason.

3. A charitable devise of the residue of an estate in trust for the use and benefit of minor children of an orphans' home was not invalid because the beneficiaries were not named with sufficient definiteness and certainty.

4. Where a testator willed the residue of his estate to trustees of an orphans' home for the use and benefit of its inmates, and by a subsequent clause directed that, if his estate should be more or less than sufficient to provide for and pay all bequests and legacies, they should be increased or diminished ratably, such clause did not destroy the operation of the residuary clause, but expressly referred to and recognized it.

5. Under Civ. Code, § 1322, declaring that a clear and distinct devise shall not be affected by any other words not equally clear and distinct, or by inference or argument from other parts of the will, a residuary devise to the trustees of an orphans' home for the benefit of its inmates was not affected by a subsequent ambiguous clause directing that, if his estate should be more or less than sufficient to provide for and pay bequests and legacies, they should be increased or diminished ratably.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Petition by Joseph M. Upham and another against the estate of E. I. Upham, deceased, for a partial distribution of property claimed to have been undisposed of by testator's will. From an order denying the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Freeman & Bates, for appellants. J. M. Thompson and J. M. Walling, for respondent Good Templars' Orphans' Home. John Gregory, for respondent minor heirs. Geo. A. Lamont and F. C. Lusk, for respondent heirs.

McFARLAND, J. E. I. Upham died, leaving a will, which, on its face, purports to dispose of all his property. His brothers, Joseph M. and Lorenzo Upham, who are his next of kin and only heirs at law, filed a petition in the probate court for a partial distribution to them of certain parts of the estate, which they claim had not been disposed of by the will, and therefore went to them as heirs. The court held that the whole estate had been disposed of by the will, and that, as petitioners were not devisees or legatees, they were not entitled to partial distribution. The petition was denied, and from the order denying it the said brothers Joseph M. and Lorenzo appeal.

By paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the will a certain piece of land known as the "Vacca-ville Orchard" and $10,000 in money are given to Martha Muzzy, a relative of testator, and also sufficient funds to take care of the family cemetery lot. By paragraph 4 the sum of $10,000 is given to Sarah Muzzy. By paragraphs 5, 6, 7, and 8 the sum of $5,000 each is given to certain named legatees. By paragraph 10 certain small sums of money are given to employes of the testator. And no objection is made in this case to any of the foregoing paragraphs. The contention of appellants is based upon paragraphs 9, 11, and 12. By paragraph 9, which is quite long, and somewhat complicated, $40,000, or, in lieu thereof, a quantity of land equal in value to that sum of money, is given to the executors of the will in trust for the use and benefit of the minor children of the appellants; and it is claimed by appellants that this trust, owing to certain provisions which it contains, is void, and that, therefore, the property mentioned in it is undisposed of by the will, and goes to them as heirs at law. Under our views of the case, however, it is not necessary to pass upon the validity of this trust clause, for, if the will creates a residuary devisee and legatee,—as we think it does,—then the latter takes the property described in any devise or legacy which for any reason fails or lapses, and the same does not go to the heir. Section 1332 of our Civil Code declares the rule above noticed as follows: "A devise of the residue of the testator's real property passes all the real property which he was entitled to devise at the time of his death, not otherwise effectually devised by his will;" and section 1333 is the same, except that it refers to a bequest of personal property, instead of a devise of real property. These sections abrogate the old common-law distinction between devisees of real property and bequests of personal property to the effect that a devise speaks from the date of the will and a bequest from the death of the testator, and according to which distinction it was generally held that property mentioned in a void or lapsed devise did not go to the residuary devisee. But, under the old authorities, before any change was made by statute, it was uniformly held that lapsed bequests went to the residuary legatee, and not to the heir; and our statutory provisions above referred to are so clear to the point that lapsed devises take the same course that further authorities upon the question seem needless. However, in New York the statutory law is that a will which in terms disposes of all the testator's real property shall be construed to pass all the real property which he was entitled to devise at the time of his death; and under that statute it has been uniformly held in that state that property mentioned in a lapsed devise goes to the residuary devisee, and not to the heir, unless a contrary intent is clearly expressed in the will. Riker v. Cornwell, 113 N. Y. 115, 20 N. E. 602; In re Benson, 96 N. Y. 499; Cruikshank v. Home for the Friendless, 113 N. Y. 337, 21 N. E. 64; Carter v. Board, 144 N. Y. 621, 39 N. E. 628; In re Bonnet's Estate, 113 N. Y. 522, 21 N. E. 139. And see, also, Floyd v. Barker, 1 Paige, 480; King v. Woodhull, 3 Edw. Ch. 79; King v. Strong, 9 Paige, 94; and Tindall's Ex'rs v. Tindall, 24 N. J. Eq. 512.

The main question in the case at bar, therefore, is whether or not a residuary devisee and legatee is created by the will. Such devisee and legatee is clearly created by paragraph 11 of the will, if the trust created by that paragraph is not void for other reasons. The paragraph is as follows: "(11) I give and bequeath to the legally qualified and constituted trustees or managers of the Good Templars' Orphans' Home of Vallejo, said county of Solano, in trust for the use and benefit of the orphan children of said institution, any residue and remainder of my estate after carrying out my hereinbefore legacies and bequests." It is contended by appellants that this trust is void for reasons, which are, substantially, these: (1) That the bequest is not charitable, because the beneficiaries are not named with sufficient definiteness and certainty; and (2) that there are no trustees named capable of taking the property. We do not think that either of these contentions can be maintained. It must be remembered that charities—both as to the trustees and the beneficiaries—are more liberally construed than are gifts to individuals. See 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1165–1167, et seq. That the gift here was for charity is beyond question. It was shown by the evidence—which was properly admitted, under section 1340 of the Civil Code—that the Good Templars' Orphans' Home at Vallejo had been in existence for a great many years, that its purpose was to take care of orphan children, that it accommodated about 200 of such children, and that about that number were usually and continuously maintained there. To sustain the proposition that this constitutes a charity within the legal meaning of the word, no further authority is necessary than that of People v. Cogswell, 113 Cal. 129, 45 Pac. 270; but the truth of the proposition is further illustrated by the numerous cases referred to in the opinion of the supreme court of the United States in Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 163, 2 Sup. Ct. 327, 27 L. Ed. 397. It is contended, however, that the trust is void, because the parties named as trustees are incapable of taking the property. The trustees of the orphans' home, it is true, do not constitute a corporation. It was organized under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of California, which is a corporation, and it is under the management and control of a continuous board of trustees, consisting of eight persons, one-half of whom are selected every two years by the order. These trustees seem to be appropriate persons to take charge of this charitable fund, and manage it for the purposes of the trust; but, even if it should be held that in a strict legal sense they are not capable of taking, yet the charity would not fail for that reason. A court will not allow a charitable trust to fail for want of a legal trustee. Of course, in this country, courts of equity will not go so far in executing indefinite charities as the courts of equity went in England under the statute of 43 Eliz.; for there, if it could be discovered from a deed or will that anything in the nature of a charity was intended, however vague or indefinite, the chancellor would devote it to some sort of a charity. But in this country courts have been extremely liberal in construing charities, and under principles analogous to the doctrine of cy-pres have enforced trusts far more indefinite and inexact than the one here involved. The rule upon this subject is very fully laid down by the supreme court of the United States in Russell v. Allen, supra, as follows: "By the law of England from before the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 4, and by the laws of this country at the present day (except in those states in which it has been restricted by statute or judicial decision, as in Virginia, Maryland, and more recently in New York), trusts for public charitable purposes are upheld under circumstances under which private trusts would fail. Being for objects of permanent interest and benefit to the public, they may be perpetual in their duration, and are not within the rule against perpetuities; and the instruments creating them should be so construed as to give them effect, if possible, and to carry out the general intention of the donor, when clearly manifested, even if the particular form or manner pointed out by him cannot be followed. They may, and, indeed, must, be for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons; for, if all the beneficiaries are personally designated, the trust lacks the essential element of indefiniteness, which is one characteristic of a legal charity. If the founder describes the general nature of the charitable trust, he may leave the details of its administration to be settled by trustees under the superintendence of a court of chancery; and an omission to name trustees, or the death or declination of the trustees named, will not defeat the trust, but the court will appoint new trustees in their stead." In Schmidt v. Hess, 60 Mo. 591, a gift had been made to the "Lutheran Church," which was unincorporated, and in a suit brought by the trustees of the church they were permitted to show to what church the gift applied; and the court, among other things, said: "No doubt is entertained that the gift under consideration is a charity, and falls within the meaning of the rules of chancery. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1164, and cases cited. And although, in consequence of the nonincorporation of the church for whose benefit the grant was made, there was no one in esse at the time of making the donation capable of being the recipient of the trust, yet, the use being a charitable one, a court of equity, having ascertained the intent of the grantor, will not allow the grant on that account to fail, but will see to its effectuation,"—citing cases. See, also, Lilly v. Tobbein (Mo. Sup.) 15 S. W. 618. And in section 730, 2 Perry, Trusts, a number of instances are given of charities held to be good, which illustrate the principles which sustain the gift to the orphans' home here involved. The following is the language there used to which we refer: "It is well settled that the devise of a charitable use to church wardens, although not a corporation capable in law of holding and transmitting property, will be sustained; so to an institution neither established nor incorporated in the life of the donor; and so a devise to certain officers or their successors in office, or, if they are incapable of executing the trust, then to a corporation to be formed for the purpose, was held by the supreme court of the United States to be a good devise, and capable of being carried into effect. A gift to a corporation by a misnomer is good for a charitable purpose if the corporation can be identified; gifts in trust to voluntary associations for charitable purposes have been held good; and so of gifts to churches, societies, conferences, yearly meetings of Friends, and families of Shakers, and other organizations. These bodies, or quasi corporations, have been considered so far under the control of a court of equity that they would be compelled to execute the duties of the trust imposed upon them, and could be dealt with for a breach." Therefore, under the principles of the authorities above noticed, the gift to the trustees of the orphans' home is a valid charity; and, this being so, a residuary legatee and devisee was thus created, to whom lapsed legacies go under the statutory provisions above quoted. There are no words in the will expressing a contrary intent, and the rule is that, "where the residuary bequest is not circumscribed by clear expressions in the instrument, and the title of the residuary legatee is not narrowed by special words of unmistakable import, he will take whatever may fall into the residue, whether by lapse, invalid disposition, or other reason." Riker v. Cornwell, 113 N. Y. 115, 20 N. E. 602.

With respect to other objections made by appellants, it may be said that we see no reason why a court of equity cannot enforce this trust, or why there are no beneficiaries in whose interest it could be enforced. In the latter respect there is no difference between this case and any other case where the benefit is for an indefinite number of persons. We see nothing in the objection that it is not stated in the will whether the benefit is to be for orphans or half orphans. The will uses the word "orphan," and that has a legal meaning. If the clause creates a charity, it is not obnoxious to the law against perpetuities, and is expressly warranted by section 1313 of the Civil Code. No question is raised here as to the gift being for more than one-third of the estate. The contention that too much discretion is given to the trustees is answered by the citations and quotations from authorities hereinbefore given.

It is contended by appellants that paragraph 12 revokes, or annuls, or renders inoperative paragraph 11. Paragraph 12 is as follows: "If my estate should be more or less than sufficient, after paying my debts, to provide for and pay all the above-mentioned devises, bequests, and legacies, then all the said devises, bequests, and legacies shall be increased or diminished ratably, except the provisions for the said cemetery lot and the devise to Martha Muzzy of the parcel of land of sixty acres in Vacca valley, known as the 'Vaccaville Orchard.'" This paragraph, construed in the light of the whole will, may perhaps be considered as to some extent uncertain and ambiguous. Respondent contends that it simply provides for the possible contingency of the residue going to the orphans' home being greater than one-third of the estate. But, however that may be, it certainly cannot be construed as destroying, or as intending to destroy, paragraph 11. Paragraph 11 is one of "the above-mentioned devises, bequests, and legacies"; and how can a subsequent clause, which expressly refers to and recognizes as existing a previous clause, be held to revoke or destroy the latter, where there are no operative words to that effect, or which express any such intent? Moreover, it is a rule of construction of wills—declared by our Code (section 1322, Civ. Code)—that "a clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any reasons assigned therefor, or by any other words not equally clear and distinct, or by inference or argument from other parts of the will, or by an inaccurate recital of or reference to its contents in another part of the will"; and, applying this rule to the case at bar, it is plain that the "clear and distinct" provisions of paragraph 11 are not revoked or destroyed by the language of paragraph 12, or by any "inference or argument from other parts of the will."

The foregoing facts make it unnecessary to consider the question whether, if paragraph 12 could be construed as revoking paragraph 11, it would not follow that paragraph 12 itself constituted as residuary legatees the other devisees and legatees whose devises and legacies were to be increased "ratably"; thus leaving appellants in no better position. On this point, however, it may be well to observe that, as said in Morton v. Woodbury, 153 N. Y. 243, 47 N. E. 283: "No particular mode of expression is necessary to constitute a residuary legatee. It is sufficient, if the intention of the testator be plainly expressed in the will, that the surplus of the estate after payment of debts and legacies shall be taken by a person there designated." And where a testator gives all of his property remaining after the payment of specific gifts, though the fund be estimated in money, the gift of that which thus remains is not specific, but carries everything which has not been effectually disposed of by reason of lapses, or invalid and void devises or legacies. Hulin v. Squires (Sup.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 309; Bland v. Lamb, 2 Jac. & W. 399; Carter v. Taggart, 16 Sim. 423. In the case at bar there is no hostility or contest between the various devisees and legatees. They recognize each other's rights as expressed in the will, and stand together in defending it against the assaults of appellants.

The conclusions above reached are strengthened by the consideration that it was the clear intent of the testator, expressed in the will, that no part of his estate should go to appellants; and this consideration is given great weight in all the decided cases where questions similar to those arising in the case at bar were involved. We do not see how the disputed clauses of the will, which we hold to be good, can be overthrown without wrongfully applying to a charity those strict and technical rules which can be rightfully invoked only as against private trusts. The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.

WELCH v. SARGENT et al. (STOCKTON SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. et al., Interveners. Sac. 681).

CORPORATIONS — UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS — STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—PAYMENT—CORPORATE DEBTS—EFFECT.

1. Where stockholders, knowing a corporation to be insolvent, voluntarily, without consideration and out of the ordinary course of business, transferred their unpaid stock to insolvent or irresponsible transferees, such transfers were void, as against corporate creditors, though one of the stockholders transferred his stock without intent to escape liability thereon.

2. A judgment against a stockholder in an action by a corporation to recover unpaid subscriptions is conclusive of the question of such stockholder's liability in a subsequent action by corporate creditors to enforce such liability.

3. Where, in an action by various corporate creditors against a stockholder of an insolvent corporation to recover unpaid subscriptions, the stockholder pleaded a release as to one of them, but the claims of the others amounted to more than the amount of the stockholder's liability, he was not prejudiced by a failure of the court to find on the issues raised by such release, since each creditor was entitled to a several judgment against each stockholder, their liability being several, and not joint.

4. Since Civ. Code, § 322, declaring that, if any stockholder pays his proportion of any corporate debt, he is thereby released from any further personal liability therefor, does not affect the stockholder's liability to the corporation for unpaid subscriptions, a stockholder's payment to a corporate creditor of the amount due on his unpaid subscription, in reduction of the corporation's debt, he knowing it to be insolvent, will not relieve him from liability in an action by other creditors to recover such unpaid subscription, in the absence of evidence of a corporate act authorizing such creditor to make such application of the amount due.

5. Where a creditor of an insolvent corporation obtained collaterals to secure its debt in good faith and in due course of business, it cannot be compelled to surrender such securities for the common benefit of all corporate creditors, nor can it share in other assets of the corporation until such securities have been exhausted.

6. Where a stockholder of an insolvent corporation paid a portion of the corporate indebtedness on which he was liable as surety, he was entitled to share the assets of the corporation ratably with other creditors to the extent of the payment so made.

7. A bill to enforce a stockholder's liability for unpaid subscriptions may be filed against a single stockholder or any number of stockholders indebted for unpaid subscriptions, and the fund realized distributed ratably among all the creditors of the corporation.

8. A finding, in an action by creditors against stockholders of an insolvent corporation to recover unpaid subscriptions, that its indebtedness exceeded such unpaid subscriptions, was sufficient, without specifying the amounts due such creditors, and was not inconsistent with a finding that the court could not definitely determine the amount due one of such creditors until securities held by it had been realized.

9. Whether a judgment is sustained by a finding of fact cannot be questioned on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Charles M. Welch, administrator of the estate of C. E. Welch, deceased, against R. C. Sargent and others, and Stockton Savings & Loan Society and others, interveners, to enforce stockholders' liability for unpaid subscriptions. A decree was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying motions for a new trial certain of the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ansel Smith and Gus G. Grant, for appellants. Minor & Ashley, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. This is an equitable action brought by a creditor of the Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works, a corporation, and to obtain a judgment against certain stockholders therein to the extent of the unpaid balance due from them on their subscription to the capital stock of said defendant corporation, and to have certain transfers of stock, alleged to have been fraudulently made, declared illegal, the transfers canceled, and that judgment be entered against the transferors. General relief is also asked. The pleadings are multitudinous, and present many phases, all grouping around the defendant corporation, while all the pleaders seek some sort of relief from it and from each other.

Plaintiff's intestate, on April 28, 1894, became a judgment creditor of the corporation. Plaintiff alleges that at a time when the corporation was insolvent certain defendants, for the purpose of evading liability, transferred, without consideration, to certain other defendants, alleged to be then and now insolvent, specified shares of its capital stock. Defendant Houser pleads certain facts relating to the way he acquired his stock as exempting him from liability thereon; that he obtained his stock as fully paid up and unassessable; and that he had settled with the intervenor the Stockton Savings & Loan Society, and had been by it released. Some of the defendants file cross complaints setting up that they are holden as indorsers on a certain note given by the corporation to the intervenor the loan society for $60,000, of which $57,000 remain unpaid. These defendants allege that some of the stockholder defendants still owe 25 per cent. on their capital stock, and they seek to have the fund arising from such stock applied to said note. Defendant R. C. Sargent files a cross complaint, much the same as the last above defendants, and in a still further cross complaint avers that he and certain other defendants on March 17, 1892, executed to defendant J. P. Sargent their promissory note for $50,000, upon which the makers obtained that sum of money, and advanced the same to the corporation under an agreement that it would pay the note when due; that it paid all of said note except $16,069.68, for which unpaid balance the holder of the note has sued the makers. This defendant prays that the assets of the corporation may be applied to its indebtedness generally, including this note. Defendant Baldwin also files a cross complaint alleging that the corporation owes him and another attorney a fee, of which his share is $500, and prays that its assets may be applied to its debts, including this claim. The loan society, like plaintiff, has a judgment against the corporation, entered December 28, 1893, upon which, by complaint in intervention, it claims an unpaid balance of $153,034.27, and prays payment be made to the loan society, ratably with other indebtedness of the corporation, out of any sum found coming to the corporation from the stockholders. Plaintiff answers this intervention, and, among other things, alleges that the loan society holds securities given it by the corporation sufficient to pay this judgment, and that this intervener the loan society should not share the other assets of the corporation without delivering up its securities to the common creditors' fund. James A. Louttit, as executor, intervenes, setting up that his testatrix, on February 18, 1885, obtained a judgment against the corporation for $13,966.90, no part of which has been paid. He sets up substantially the facts as pleaded by plaintiff, and asks to have the fund derived from the unpaid stock applied ratably on this judgment. Executions on these several judgments were returned nulla bona. The foregoing will convey a general idea of the issues.

Certain, but not all, of the defendants appeal from the order denying their several motions for a new trial. There is no appeal from the judgment. The court found, as conclusions of law, that there is due from the corporation to plaintiff, the interveners, and certain cross complainants a sum largely in excess of the unpaid balances due on the capital stock of the corporation; that the court cannot fix the amount now due the loan society until the unpaid subscriptions are paid in, and the value of the securities held by the loan society is ascertained, and the securities are collected; that cross complainants R. C. Sargent and Baldwin are entitled to no credits by reason of the matters set forth in their cross complaints and answers; that, as to the equities claimed by certain other defendants and cross complainants, the court cannot entertain or consider them, but will do so when the amount due on the unpaid stock shall have been paid in, and until such payments said equities cannot be ascertained; that the several transfers of stock in the pleadings and findings mentioned, except as to defendant Fred. M. West, are fraudulent and void, and as to West's transfer it is void as against the creditors of the corporation; that judgment should be entered in favor of certain parties against certain named defendants in amounts named, being the amounts due on the unpaid stock of the corporation; that, there being divers persons interested in the fund to arise from said subscriptions to the stock of the corporation, it is necessary that a receiver be appointed to receive all sums paid under the judgments, to be held subject to the order of the court.

It is quite difficult, within any reasonable space, to fairly present the facts and the law upon the various conflicting interests involved. Avoiding unnecessary minutiae, we will endeavor to dispose of the salient questions. It sufficiently appears from the evidence that the corporation was insolvent when the transfers of stock complained of were made as found by the court, and has been insolvent ever since, and that the transferors knew the fact; and the evidence also sustains the finding that the transfers were made out of the ordinary course of business, were voluntary and without valuable consideration, and were made to insolvent or irresponsible transferees, and, except as to defendant F. M. West, with intent on the part of the transferors to escape liability. This finding relates to the following defendants: R. C. Sargent, William Inglis, L. U. Shippee (defendant Tarbox's intestate), C. Grattan, F. M. West, Otis Perrin (defendant Kate M. Perrin's testate), Kate M. Perrin, W. H. McKee, and Frank Burton. The owners of shares when the action was begun, not embraced in the foregoing category, are: Daniel Houser, W. A. Shippee, B. F. Langford, C. H. Fairchild, George A. McKenzie, F. T. Baldwin, P. B. Fraser, S. S. Littlehale, and George Inglis. There is no finding as to defendant and stockholder T. H. McCall, who owns 80 shares; for the reason that he has not appeared, and is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, being a nonresident. It was found that defendant and stockholder Fairchild had been discharged of liability by insolvency proceedings. It was found that there remained unpaid on all the shares of the defendants above named a balance of 25 per cent., except on the 10 shares of Littlehale, which were fully paid up; and that the corporation had neglected and refused to levy any further assessments upon the shares owned by these defendants, or to collect the unpaid subscriptions.

Generally speaking, the law places no restriction upon the right of a stockholder of a corporation to transfer his stock, so long as the corporation is solvent. But, as was said by Mr. Justice Temple in National Carriage Mfg. Co. v. Story & Isham Commercial Co., 111 Cal. 531, 44 Pac. 157: "The American doctrine is that after the corporation has become insolvent, and the stockholder knows this, and especially if the corporation has ceased to do business, a shareholder cannot transfer his stock to an insolvent or to an irresponsible person, so as to relieve himself from liability;" and it is added: "I do not find from the cases that it is necessary to find, in addition to the above facts, that there was an actual intent to defraud." See the authorities cited in the opinion; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3259. The questions presented in the present case relate mostly to the application of settled principles to the claims of the various parties. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider the separate defenses made. The appellants are defendants Houser, R. C. and J. P. Sargent, McKenzie, William Inglis, W. A. Shippee, Grattan, F. M. West, Kate Perrin for herself and as executrix of Otis Perrin, McKee, Tarbox as administrator of L. U. Shippee's estate, and Langford. Neither the corporation nor the loan society appeals.

As to defendant Houser: When the third and last assessment of 25 per cent. on the stock of the corporation was levied, Houser refused payment, whereupon the corporation brought an action to enforce collection. In his answer he set up, at that time, the facts now pleaded by him in defense to plaintiff's action. It was held here that he was liable on his stock (Agricultural Works v. Houser, 109 Cal. 1, 41 Pac. 809); and, so far as the same facts are now pleaded, that case is conclusive against his present contention. In his answer to the intervention of the loan society, but not elsewhere in the pleadings, he alleges a full and complete settlement with the loan society, and a full accord and satisfaction of any and all claims it holds or held against him by reason of his ownership of said shares of the corporation stock. There was evidence that Houser paid $6,000 in compromise of the suit to collect the third assessment, and the witness testified that he understood the settlement to include all claims the loan society had against Houser, and that it included all judgments and all indebtedness. A receipt is in evidence showing what the $6,000 were paid for, and it refers only to the indebtedness the subject of the then litigation, and nothing in it points to a release from any unpaid balance on the stock which is the subject of the present action. It is very doubtful whether the evidence will justify the inference that the loan society intended to release Houser from its claim to any future liability on his stock as to which 25 per cent. remained unpaid, and the evidence went in upon the understanding that it did not affect the plaintiff. We may assume, however, that the evidence showed a full release as to the bank of every liability. The court found that there was due from Houser on his 400 shares the sum of $10,000, and made no finding as to the release pleaded. Houser now claims that it was error not to find upon the issue as to the release, and that he, in any event, was liable only for his proportion to satisfy the claims of plaintiff and intervener Louttit; and, as the findings show him indebted for the full sum of $10,000, for which judgment was rendered, this would require him to pay the full amount to the loan society if plaintiff and Louttit were paid by others, or if Houser were released by them or either of them. It is further objected that there was no finding as to the amount due the loan society, and that Houser was injured by failure to find this fact. The court found the amount due plaintiff and intervener Louttit. The president of the loan society testified: "It is impossible to name the exact amount now due the bank, as it depended upon our ability to collect the securities we hold." The court found that December 28, 1893, the loan society obtained a judgment against the corporation for $262,126.55; that the bank held divers securities therefor; "that said security, assets, and property the said intervener now has and holds; that the court does not now undertake to determine what is the value of said security, but finds that the said securities and properties so held by said bank are of great value, but the exact amount whereof is to be hereafter ascertained and determined." There was evidence that some payments had been made which left a balance still due the bank on this judgment of $118,806.93. There was evidence tending to show that the bank held judgments, as security, in favor of the corporation, in what were known as the "Insurance Cases," for $90,000, upon which some small payments had been made; also held notes in favor of the corporation of the possible value of $7,000,—making somewhat less than $97,000 of collaterals, which, if collected, would still leave due on its judgment against the corporation about $21,000. As we understand the evidence, there is due the bank also the unpaid balance on the $60,000 note.

Plaintiff and intervener Louttit were entitled to several judgments against each stockholder, the liability being several, and not joint (Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 590, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776); and their judgments exceed the amount due from Houser. No release from the unpaid balance due the corporation on the Houser stock is pleaded, and the evidence was that it is unpaid, and we have seen that Houser is liable therefor. The issue of a release from the bank is immaterial. Houser cannot be prejudiced at this time by failure to find upon it. If, upon the final hearing, nothing is found to be due from him to the bank, it will receive no part of the $10,000 paid in by him.

As to defendant William Inglis, the court found that there remained unpaid on his 180 shares the sum of $4,500. It appears that he transferred to his brother George 50 shares on December 7, 1892, and 130 shares on June 8, 1893. William was president of the corporation, which, while he was such president, executed its promissory note to the bank for $60,000, dated January 2, 1891, heretofore referred to. This note was indorsed by William Inglis and other stockholders of the corporation. Action was brought on this note by the bank, and it is now pending, for an alleged balance of $57,036.75 and interest. It appears that Inglis executed a joint and several note, with other stockholders, to J. P. Sargent, dated March 17, 1892, for $50,000, to raise money for the corporation, and it was paid to the corporation at the time upon the alleged agreement that it would pay the note. The corporation did pay all but an alleged balance of $16,069.88. Suit was brought by the holder of the note, and judgment was entered therein since this action was commenced. There is no evidence of its payment. On September 30, 1893, some months after he transferred his stock to his son George, William Inglis paid to the bank $4,500, to which at that time the corporation was largely indebted much beyond this sum. This payment was the exact amount due as unpaid subscription on his stock. George Inglis, William's transferee, was secretary of the defendant corporation at the time. He testified that the bank notified him of the payment, and that it was on account of the corporation indebtedness to the bank, and that he understood from his father that it was intended as the unpaid balance due on his shares. In the handwriting of the bookkeeper of the corporation is the following entry in the journal: "Stockton Savings & Loan Society, to capital stock, $4,500.00, for amount paid by William Inglis as full payment on one hundred and eighty shares of stock in the S. C. H. & A. Works, at twenty-five dollars per share." The ledger showed the loan society debited, and the corporation credited, this amount. It was not shown by whose authority these entries were made by the bookkeeper. The bookkeeper was not a witness. There was no corporate action, by resolution or otherwise, authorizing the payment or the entry, or subsequently ratifying the payment. There is in evidence a resolution passed by the bank reciting the receipt of this $4,500 payment, and that Inglis "has offered to pay to this corporation the sum of $25 per share on such stock so held by him, amounting to the sum of $4,500, and for full payment of his proportion as stockholder of said debt [referring to the liability of the corporation to the bank] other than, and exclusive of, a certain note [of said corporation] for $60,000, indorsed by said William Inglis and others, providing, in consideration of said payment, he, the said William Inglis, would be relieved from any further personal liability as such stockholder for such debt other than, and exclusive of, said note," etc. At this time the corporation was insolvent, which fact was known to Inglis and the bank.

The Code provides that "if any stockholder pays his proportion of any debt due from the corporation, incurred while he was such stockholder, he is relieved from any further personal liability for such debt" (Civ. Code, § 322); and he may thus discharge his statutory liability as a stockholder without waiting to be sued, and payment, if bona fide, would be a bar to an action to collect anything further from the stockholder upon his statutory liability. The liability of the stockholder to the corporation for the unpaid balance of his subscription is a different matter altogether, and is an asset of the corporation,—is payable to the corporation, and no one else. Section 331, Civ. Code, provides: "The directors of any corporation * * * may for the purpose of paying expenses, conducting business or paying debts, levy and collect assessments upon the subscribed capital stock thereof. * * *

Then follow sections directing when assessments may be levied, the manner of levying and collecting the same, etc. It is in evidence that no assessment had been levied by the corporation to enforce payment of the unpaid balance due on its outstanding shares. There was no authority given to Inglis by any corporate act of the corporation to make any payment to the bank in discharge of his liability to the corporation, without which we do not think he could relieve himself from his liability to it. If one stockholder of a corporation could take upon himself such authority, all could do so, and the directors would lose control of one of its principal sources of revenue. If the corporation were solvent, probably no question would be made by it or by creditors; but where it is insolvent, and a stockholder, knowing the fact, undertakes thus, without authority, to divert the assets of the corporation, we do not think he should be heard to plead such a payment in discharge of the liability. He could not set off his own debt against the corporation or its creditors on account of unpaid capital stock in an action such as this is. 1 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 193. Why should he be permitted to do so indirectly by paying a corporate debt to the bank? We do not think it necessary to decide whether the unpaid balances on the stock constituted a trust fund in the hands of the directors which could not be disposed of by either a stockholder or by the directors for the benefit of any one creditor, but must be held by them in trust for the benefit of all the creditors, the corporation being insolvent. The trial court so held, and the point is much discussed in the briefs. We decide only that Inglis' voluntary payment to the bank was unauthorized by the corporation, and did not discharge him from his liability to the creditors of the corporation in this action.

Where the corporation is insolvent, and the directors neglect or refuse to make a call, courts of equity will disregard the formality of a call, and will order the unpaid subscriptions to be paid to a receiver for the benefit of the corporate creditors. Id. § 108; Glenn v. Saxton, 68 Cal. 353, 9 Pac. 420. Stockholders may pay to the corporation the amount of their subscription at any time, and thus discharge their liability; but when the corporation is insolvent they cannot take upon themselves the authority of the corporation, and pay the subscription to one creditor to the injury of the other creditors.

Otis Perrin made a payment to the bank at the same time, and under similar circumstances and for the same purpose, as Inglis made his payment. What has been said as to Inglis applies to Perrin.

Certain stockholders defendants set up by cross complaint, as we have heretofore stated, that they are indorsers of the corporation note for $60,000, and that judgment has been rendered against them for an unpaid balance. Defendant R. C. Sargent set up that he and other stockholders are defendants in an action to enforce payment of a note made by them for the benefit of the corporation. Defendant Baldwin pleaded against his liability a claim due him from the corporation. These defendants ask that the unpaid balance due on stock subscriptions be applied ratably in payment of the debts for which they are liable. Intervener the loan society made a similar claim to share ratably with other creditors. As to intervener the loan society, the court held that its claim for the balance still due, after its securities are realized upon, ranks with plaintiff's and Louttit's claims, and must share ratably with them and other creditors. It was also held that the bank is not obliged to surrender its securities for the common benefit of all creditors. We see no error in thus holding. The securities came into the hands of the bank in due course of business, untainted by fraud, and no lack of good faith is alleged or proved. The corporation had a right to prefer the bank (Civ. Code, § 3432); and under Id. § 3433, the creditors, other than the bank, can compel the bank to first exhaust its securities before it can share the other assets of the corporation.

The court, we think, properly held that indorsers of the corporation note for $60,000 stand in the relation of ordinary creditors of the corporation to the extent of any payment made by them, and may share ratably the assets of the corporation. So, also, Baldwin, on making proof of his claim against the corporation. So, also, Inglis and Perrin, who paid some portion of the ordinary debt of the corporation; and, besides, they have some equities arising out of the agreement under which they paid this portion of the corporation debt to be adjusted between them and the bank, as also has Houser.

The finding as to the Sargent note is not questioned in the briefs, and we pass it without comment.

Ordinarily, the bill is brought for the benefit of all the creditors who choose to come in, but the action may be against a single stockholder or any number of them (1 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, §§ 205, 206); and the fund realized from the suit in equity is distributed ratably among all the creditors (Mathis v. Pridham, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 58, 20 S. W. 1015; 1 Cook, Stock, Stockh. & Corp. Law, § 193). See, also, Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448; Insurance Co. v. Gulick, 102 Ill. 41; Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, 25 L. Ed. 885; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, and 30 Pac. 776; Potter v. Dear, 95 Cal. 578, 30 Pac. 777.

000 note of the corporation of which they were indorsers; that the court should have found the amount due intervener the loan society; and that there is no finding of a definite amount due from the defendant corporation greater than the sums due plaintiff and intervener Louttit, in all $17,542.15, while the aggregate of judgments against all the defendant stockholders is $51,200. It is claimed that the judgments against the appealing defendants, in all $20,575, are $3,035 in excess of all the debts found by the court to exist against the corporation. It may be that a court of equity would not order full payment by all stockholders of unpaid subscriptions, where it was clearly unnecessary to do so to meet the claims proved. However this may be, it appears from the evidence that the corporate debt is largely in excess of the unpaid subscriptions, and the court so found. We think this was a sufficient finding of the material ultimate fact upon the issues presented by plaintiff and interveners Louttit and the loan society, and was not inconsistent with the fact found that the court could not definitely determine the exact amount due the bank until the securities held by it were realized upon. There was some evidence of the tentative value of these securities, but not of their actual cash value. By far the largest security was an unpaid judgment against certain insurance companies. The remaining securities were promissory notes and book accounts of uncertain value. We think the court would not have been warranted by the evidence in determining the exact sum due the bank after deducting its securities, but there was sufficient evidence to justify it in finding that the debts of the corporation were largely in excess of the unpaid subscriptions. For the purposes of the decree, which was, in effect, only interlocutory, the findings are sufficiently responsive to the issues.

It is urged that a judgment was erroneously entered against the estate of Otis Perrin, deceased. The judgment was that the administrator pay in due course of administration, and payments were ordered to be made to a receiver, and to be subject to the further order of the court. The claims of plaintiff and intervener Louttit were duly presented to the representative of the estate. Whether the judgment is sustained by the finding cannot be questioned on an appeal from an order denying new trial (Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186); and the findings, we think, are supported by the evidence. Besides, we think the judgment as entered was proper. It is advised that the judgment and order be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

BROUSE v. LAW, Judge. (Sac. 766.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1899.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE TO CREDITORS—RIGHT TO DESIGNATE NEWSPAPER IN FIRST INSTANCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1490, declaring that "every executor or administrator * * * shall cause to be published in some newspaper of the county, if there be one, if not, then in such newspaper as may be designated by the court, a notice to creditors * * *; such notice must be published as often as the judge or court shall direct, but not less than once a week for four weeks; the court or judge may also direct additional notice by publication or posting,"—the power of the court to designate in its original order the newspaper in which such notice shall be published exists only when there is no newspaper published in the county.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Petition by Lillian May Brouse, executrix, against J. K. Law, judge of the superior court of Merced county, for writ of review of an order made by defendant. Order modified.

Jas. F. Peck, for petitioner.

HARRISON, J. After the superior court of Merced county had admitted to probate the last will and testament of Augustine Smith, deceased, and had issued letters testamentary thereon to the petitioner, it made the following order: "It is ordered that notice to the creditors of Augustine Smith, deceased, requiring all persons having claims against said deceased to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, to Lillian M. Brouse, executrix of the last will and testament of Augustine Smith, deceased, at her residence or place of business, to be specified in said notice, be given by said executrix by publication in the Merced Express, a newspaper printed and published in Merced county, state of California, once a week for four successive weeks. Done in open court this 9th day of November, 1899. J. K. Law, Judge of the Superior Court of Merced County, State of California." The executrix has petitioned this court for a writ of review of said order upon the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to designate the newspaper in which she should publish the notice to the creditors of the deceased, and upon her petition the writ was issued, and return made showing that the above order was made.

Section 1490, Code Civ. Proc., declares as follows: "Every executor or administrator must, immediately after his appointment, cause to be published in some newspaper of the county, if there be one, if not, then in such newspaper as may be designated by the court, a notice to the creditors of the decedent, requiring all persons having claims against him to exhibit them, with the necessary vouchers, to the executor or administrator, at the place of his residence or business, to be specified in the notice; such notice must be published as often as the judge or court shall direct, but not less than once a week for four weeks; the court or judge may also direct additional notice by publication or posting." The publication of this notice is a function which the statute declares shall be performed by the executor and administrator, and, like any other duty imposed upon that officer, unless some restriction is placed upon him, the manner and mode of its performance is, in the first instance, to be determined by him. The provision that, if there is no newspaper published in the county, the court is to designate the newspaper in which the notice is to be published, implies that the power of the court to designate the newspaper exists only in the case specified. The court does not derive any authority to designate the newspaper from the provision in the section authorizing it to direct additional notice to be given. This "additional notice" may be directed at the same time that the original order is made. Johnston v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 666, 39 Pac. 36. But the order for such additional notice is distinct from the order directing the executor to cause a notice to be published. The use of the word "also" shows that the direction here authorized is for some notice to be superadded to that directed by the original order, since, under the phrase, "not less than once a week for four weeks," the court could, in its original order, direct that the notice be published with greater frequency, or for a longer period. Upon the application of the executor for a decree declaring that due notice to creditors has been given, the court will examine the character of the publication that has been made, and, if it shall then determine that its character and form have been such as not to give sufficient notice for the presentation of claims against the estate, it will refuse to make such decree. Johnston v. Superior Court, supra. This power does not, however, confer upon it the power to designate in its original order the newspaper in which the notice shall be published. The order of the superior court is therefore modified by annulling and striking therefrom the words "by publication in the Merced Express, a newspaper printed and published in Merced county, state of California."

We concur: GAROUTTE, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.; TEMPLE, J.; VAN DYKE, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. Nothing is involved in this proceeding except the mere question of power to designate the newspaper in which notice to creditors is to be published. It is clear that the statute makes the judge of the probate court, and not the administrator or executor, the final judge as to what is sufficient notice, and I see no reason to hold that what the judge may order after notice by the administrator or executor may not be ordered in advance. Such a construction of the statute would conduce to expedition and economy, and subserve the policy of the law.

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1899.)

In bank. On petition for rehearing. Denied, and judgment modified.

For former opinion, see 59 Pac. 202.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing in bank is denied, but that part of the opinion which relates to the averment of the appointment of the commissioner by the board of supervisors, and holds the same to be defective, is stricken out. The demurrer is general, and does not raise that point. The judgment heretofore rendered herein is modified by striking therefrom the words, "With directions to the court below to permit the plaintiffs to amend their complaint to accord with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion."

In re MARRE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,899.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 9, 1899.)

REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—ADMINISTRATOR'S ACCOUNT—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER—PRESUMPTION—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST.

1. The statement of facts proved by the evidence as shown by a certified bill of exceptions, not objected to below, will be treated as correct on appeal, though appellant claims that the facts were not established.

2. Where oral objections to an administrator's account were heard without raising the question that they were not in writing, it will be presumed that written objections were waived.

3. That an administrator, after his second account, was derelict, in failing to bring to trial a suit against him on the trial or settlement of which the final settlement of the estate solely depended, from the time of his first account, and delayed a settlement of the suit by a compromise arranged by the heirs at the time of the second account, does not justify charging him with interest from the time of his first account.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

59 P.—25

In the matter of the estate of G. B. Marre, deceased. From an order charging the administrator with interest, he appeals. Modified.

Thos. F. Bachelder, for appellant. Timothy J. Lyons, T. C. Judkins, and A. Ruef, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The administrator appeals from an order charging him with interest, on settlement of his second account, from the date of the settlement of his first account. In his second account, which was filed February 16, 1898, after an order of the court had been made to show cause why he should not make the account, the administrator charged himself with $7,979.79 balance cash on hand from last report. The first account was settled July 28, 1891. In the second account, which is duly verified, the administrator makes a statement explanatory of his failure to close the estate,—that on January 18, 1891, an action was commenced against him, as administrator, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, for an amount in excess of the funds in his hands belonging to the estate, and that the suit was still pending; that it had been several times set for hearing at his request, and at the time of filing the account was set down for hearing February 28, 1898. Some few items of expenditure since the settlement of the first account were allowed, and the account was settled, showing a balance of cash on hand of $7,637.21, and the court charged the administrator with legal interest on this balance from July 28, 1891, amounting to $3,430. When the account came on to be heard on February 28, 1898, the day fixed for the hearing, the attorneys for the heirs at law being present, the hearing was continued to March 14th and again to March 16th, on which last day the attorneys for the heirs made certain oral statements by way of objections to the account and report. They claimed that the administrator should be charged with interest from July 28, 1891, and in support of the claim stated that the first account as settled showed that all the debts and expenses and charges of administration had been fully paid, and that the only necessity for not closing the estate was the pendency of the lawsuit referred to above; that no proper efforts had been made by the administrator to bring the case to trial, which he could have done by due diligence, and that the continued excuse of the administrator of the pendency of said suit showed bad faith, and a desire to avoid the final settlement; that the report failed to show what, if anything, the administrator had done towards the investment of the money held by him, or to give any explanation for the long delay in bringing said action to trial. The bill of exceptions then shows that, upon the foregoing objections being made, the administrator, by his attorney, denied all intentional delay in the trial of said cause, and claimed that he had been making efforts to compromise the action; that the cause was set for trial February 23d, and had not been reached on the calendar; that he was not bound to make further explanation or report, or to do more than charge himself with the balance of the money in his hands, which he had done. The hearing was thereupon placed on the reserved calendar, to be restored for further hearing upon motion of the administrator or any of the heirs represented by their attorneys; and later, upon motion of the heirs, the hearing was fixed for November 23, 1898, and was regularly continued to December 5, 1898, when the account came on to be heard, all parties being represented by attorneys. The bill of exceptions then proceeds as follows: "The heirs, by their aforesaid attorneys, announced that they desired the account to be then and there finally heard, and the administrator's liability to the estate fixed and adjudicated. They thereupon showed to the court, by the records of said estate, and the matters and things which appeared to the court, as per settlement of the first account, and the administration thereof since said time, that upon the settlement of the first account there was no necessity for the further administration of said estate except the fact of the existence of the suit against the administrator aforesaid;" that the said suit had not been brought to trial by the administrator notwithstanding six months had elapsed since the last continuance of the hearing of this account; that during this intervening period the heirs had arranged a compromise of said suit with the plaintiff therein for the sum of $1,000, conditioned upon its immediate payment by the administrator, subject to the approval of the court; that the administrator was urged by the heirs to pay this amount; "that said administrator, in reply to the demands of said heirs, admitted (as he had previously thereto) that he had no money of said estate in his hands with which to pay said compromise sum of one thousand dollars;" that about July 3, 1898, said administrator had prepared a petition, which was in the hands of the heirs, praying the order of the court for authority to pay said sum in compromise of the suit, and that, after signing and verifying the petition, he asked that it be not filed for a few weeks, promising that within that time he would secure the money to compromise said suit; that he then left the state; that the heirs had written him, demanding the settlement of the suit and the settlement of his account, but that he has taken no action touching such matters; that the heirs are still able to compromise the suit for $1,000 if the administrator should be ordered to effect the compromise; that since the heirs made their objections at the hearing, March 16, 1898, the administrator had made no offer to change or modify his position then taken that he was not called upon to do so. The bill of exceptions shows that "the matter was submitted by the administrator and the heirs without further proceedings, no objections being made or suggested by any person."

1. Appellant now claims that the foregoing statements were not established by any evidence, but were nothing but statements made by the attorneys of the heirs at the hearing, and that there was no evidence whatever submitted to establish these statements. The bill of exceptions states that the heirs "showed to the court" by the records and "the matters and things which appeared to the court, as per settlement of the first account, and the administration thereof since said time," the facts which we have summarized. If there was no evidence to support these statements in the form they appeared, it was the duty of the administrator to object to their thus going into the bill. He complains that they were all inserted by way of amendments, and that the court had no right to include this matter, because they were but unsupported statements of counsel at the hearing. This should have been made to appear in the bill of exceptions if such was the fact. On the contrary, the judge certifies to the correctness of the bill as the administrator's bill of exceptions, and the hearing was had on what purports to be a summary of the evidence as now certified to us without objection. Under these circumstances we must treat the bill as correctly setting forth what occurred. Hyde v. Boyle, 89 Cal. 590, 26 Pac. 1092.

2. Appellant further contends that the objections to the account cannot be considered because they were not made in writing, citing In re More's Estate, 121 Cal. 635, 54 Pac. 148; section 1635, Code Civ. Proc.,—where it was held that in contesting an administrator's account the contestant must file his exceptions thereto in writing, stating specifically the grounds of his objections, and at the hearing should be held limited to the exceptions so presented. The court laid down this salutary rule, while at the same time stating that it is the duty of the court to carefully examine the account, and reject all unjust or illegal claims, whether or not exceptions are filed. If appellant had objected at the hearing to the method of procedure allowed by the court, and had demanded that the contestants reduce their objections to writing, and file the same, and that the administrator be given time to answer, we do not doubt the court would have required contestants to comply with the rule of practice prescribed in the case cited. But he went into the hearing some time after the oral objections were made in his presence and in the presence of the court, and at no time objected on the ground now urged, and we must presume that he waived written objections.

3. The more serious question is whether the evidence justified the court in charging the administrator with interest from the date of his first account. "Whether, in any instance, the executor is chargeable with even simple interest, must be determined by the trial court from all the circumstances of that case. It cannot be said, as matter of law, that interest is to be added to the value of the property that has been lost by his neglect." Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 159, 28 Pac. 558 (at page 173, 92 Cal., and page 562, 28 Pac.). Again, it was there said: "The rule charging him with interest is, however, limited to cases in which it is either shown or presumed that the executor has himself profited by his acts, or has been guilty of such willful misfeasance as to justify the court in requiring compensation therefor." Looking to the bill of exceptions, which purports to bring up all the facts on which the court based its order, we find that at the time the first account was settled—July 28, 1891—the estate consisted entirely of money in the administrator's hands, and that there was pending against him, as such administrator, a suit demanding more than this amount on an alleged trust indebtedness of his intestate; that he had made efforts to bring the cause to trial several times in the interval between the filing of the first and second accounts. The facts submitted by the contestants were that, after the second account was filed, which was February 16, 1898, they made demand that he should urge this pending suit to trial, and that he neglected to do so; that during the period intervening between the filing of the second account and its hearing the heirs had arranged a compromise of the suit upon payment of $1,000, subject to the approval of the court, and the administrator was urged to pay this amount, but failed to do so, and said he had no money of the estate to pay said sum. It appeared, however, that he prepared a petition to the court asking authority to make the compromise, which was withheld, at his request, to give him time to get the money, and thereupon he left the state, and, although written to by the heirs, had failed to take "action touching said matters." There is no evidence tending to dispute the report of the administrator, under oath, that he had made efforts to bring the pending suit to trial, except as to his neglect after he filed his second account. There is no evidence tending to show willful neglect of duty during all the years following his first account commencing at its date. We do not see upon what principle or upon what facts shown he can be charged with interest from the date of his first account. Because he was derelict after he filed his second account, willful neglect and misfeasance cannot be presumed for the entire period of his administration after the first account was filed. It may be that the failure to bring to trial the suit pending against him was due to his fault or connivance in order to retain the use of the money in his hands, and that the delay in the settlement of the estate was due to his misconduct or negligent management of the estate; but, before he should be charged with interest for these earlier years of his administration, there should be some evidence to justify it. It was said in Re Sarment's Estate, 123 Cal. 331, 55 Pac. 1015: "An administrator is not charged with even simple interest upon the funds of the estate which may be in his hands, unless it is made to appear to the court that the estate, or the parties interested in it, have sustained loss by reason of his negligence or fault." There was fault somewhere and in some one for not sooner bringing to trial the suit against the administrator, and thus removing the only impediment to the final settlement of the estate, but we do not think the evidence fixes such fault upon the administrator at the date of his first account, or at any other precise date, so as to charge him with interest from July 28, 1891. There is evidence suggestive of the inability of the administrator to produce the money with which he charges himself. It may be that his conduct, when fully shown, will justify fixing upon him some liability beyond the funds he has received. That the matter may be fully investigated, it is directed that so much of the order as charges interest be reversed, and remanded for further proceedings, and as to the remaining portion of the order it be affirmed.

BECK v. PASADENA LAKE VINEYARD LAND & WATER CO. et al. (L. A. 596.)

IRRIGATION PLANT—WATER RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUAL—DEPRIVATION BY CORPORATION.

Where a landowner is entitled to an undisputed right and easement in and to a certain proportion of water, which an association was entitled to take from a stream to supply its irrigating plant connected with his land, on payment of his proportionate share of the expenses of maintaining the plant, a corporation succeeding to the rights of the association and the rights of other individual owners takes its property subject to his easement, and cannot deprive him thereof, though it improves and extends the system, and changes open ditches to pipe lines.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by George W. Beck against the Pasadena Lake Vineyard Land & Water Company and another. From a judgment for defendants, and orders denying a new trial and refusing to strike out the cost bill, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William H. Fuller, for appellant. A. R. Metcalf and Anderson & Anderson, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to establish by a decree of court that the above-named plaintiff was the owner of a $\frac{1}{1250}$ part of all the right, title, and interest of the Lake Vineyard Land & Water Association, as the same was originally conveyed to and owned by said association, in and to all the waters of a certain stream in Los Angeles county, known as the "Arroyo Seco," and that plaintiff was entitled to have his said water flow through the pipes of defendants into his own pipes, connected therewith, upon the payment by him of $\frac{1}{1250}$ of the costs and expenses incurred in tending and keeping in repair the pipes, reservoirs, and water plant of defendants. The plaintiff also asked for a perpetual injunction against defendants to prevent them carrying out their threat to shut the water out of his pipes, and discontinue supplying him with water. The evidence shows without conflict that the Lake Vineyard Land & Water Association was the owner of $\frac{7}{10}$ of all the waters of the Arroyo Seco, and that by mesne conveyances the plaintiff herein succeeded to $\frac{1}{1250}$ of said $\frac{7}{10}$ of said water as appurtenant to a certain $2\frac{1}{20}$ acres of land, and the right to take and use the same from the pipes and reservoirs of said association. It also appears that the said association, prior to 1887, had conveyed to various individuals all its interest in the waters of the said Arroyo Seco, together with a right and easement in and to its system of ditches, reservoirs, and water plant generally, to be used for the purpose of conducting and distributing said water by each of said transferees on the payment by him of his proportion of the expense of maintaining said system; the said association retaining the title, however, in and to the ditches, flumes, reservoirs, and pipes by means of which said waters were put to beneficial use by the grantees of said association and their successors in interest. The corporation defendant known as the Pasadena Lake Vineyard Land & Water Company was formed for the purpose of acquiring and controlling both the water that had originally belonged to the association and the system of ditches, reservoirs, flumes, and pipes above mentioned. The two corporations defendant seem to have been under the same management for a time, and a conveyance was obtained from the association to the new corporation, on the 15th day of February, 1888, of everything that the association had to convey. Nearly four-fifths of the water rights, originally in the association, were also conveyed to the new corporation, in exchange for stock therein, by the individuals owning such water rights. Upwards of one-fifth of the waters conveyed away by the association still remain vested in the individuals to whom they were conveyed. It seems that the plaintiff, among others, has refused to convey his interest in the water, or his rights in the plant or system of ditches, pipes, and reservoirs, to the corporation. The corporation has, however, fixed a uniform rate, which it charges its stockholders as well as those who refused to exchange their rights for stock in the corporation, and by this means the plaintiff finds himself in a worse position than he would be in if he had conveyed all his rights and interests to the corporation, for the stockholders are receiving, in addition to their proportion of the water, dividends, in which he is not allowed to share. The corporation refuses to furnish plaintiff with any statement of his proportion of expenses to be paid under the terms of the deed from the association to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, and threatens to deprive plaintiff of water altogether unless he pays the rates fixed by it as aforesaid. Since the conveyance to it from the association, the new corporation has changed its means of diversion from the open ditch, by which the water was formerly diverted from the arroyo, to a steel pipe, has cemented and lined the reservoirs, and has extended the system of pipes, and otherwise added to, repaired, and improved its water plant generally. The case was tried before the court without a jury. There is no finding as to whether the plaintiff is the owner of the water which he alleges ownership in in his complaint or not. This was a material issue, and plaintiff was entitled to a finding addressed directly to the ownership of the water that he claimed to own; and on the undisputed evidence, briefly stated herein, that finding should have been in plaintiff's favor. Plaintiff was also entitled to a decree that he was the owner of $\frac{1}{1250}$ of $\frac{7}{10}$ of the waters of the said arroyo. There was no conflict in the evidence on this question. The court found that plaintiff was not "entitled to the use and flow of said waters so purchased as aforesaid upon paying to the Pasadena Lake Vineyard Land & Water Company his pro rata share or proportion of the costs and expenses in tending and keeping in repair said pipes, flumes, and reservoirs in which said water is stored and conducted to the lands and supplied to plaintiff," and dissolved the temporary injunction theretofore granted, and dismissed the action. We think this action of the court erroneous. The evidence of plaintiff's rights in the water and in the water system was to be found in the deed from the association to the Wilsons. Plaintiff had regularly succeeded to the rights, privileges, and easements granted by that deed, so far as they appertained to the $2\frac{1}{20}$ acres of land claimed by him, and which were included in said deed. We think it beyond any question, and it seems to be admitted in the argument, that the deed to the Wilsons conveyed, not only the water claimed here by plaintiff, but the right and easement in the plant of the association to run the water through it, and have it delivered to them on the land, a part of which now belongs to plaintiff. The easement in these ditches, reservoirs, and pipes was a property right, and the plaintiff succeeded to it by the same instruments through which he derails title to his land, and his title in such easements is just as effectual as his title to the land; and when the new corporation received its deed from the association it took the property therein described charged and incumbered with the easement to which it was subjected by the previous deed to the Wilsons. The new corporation could not, by improving or extending its system, or changing the open ditches to pipe lines, acquire title to the water which belonged to others, nor could it thereby deprive others of any beneficial interest or right which they had in the system. We think that on the undisputed facts in the case the plaintiff and appellant was entitled to the perpetual injunction which he sought. On this view of the case it follows that the defendants were not entitled to judgment for costs, and therefore let the costs of the former trial abide the result of a new trial. The judgment and orders denying a new trial and refusing to strike out the cost bill are reversed.

DENIGAN v. HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. et al. (FREESE, Intervener.
S. F. 1,737).

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1899.)

GIFTS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where a wife deposits money, her separate property, in a bank, the account in the pass book being opened in favor of F. D. or E. D., F. D. being her husband, and there is no evidence of the purpose for which the deposit was made other than its form, or of any intent to part with the title to the money, or of a delivery of the pass book to the husband with that intent, the facts are insufficient to constitute a gift.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by James Denigan against the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society. The special administrator of Francis Denigan was, on motion, joined as a party defendant. Thereafter A. C. Freese, as administrator of the estate of Ellen Denigan, intervened. From a judgment in favor of the intervener, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins and James Gartland, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin, John O'Gara, and J. D. Sullivan, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. July 6, 1886, Ellen Denigan deposited with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society the sum of $1,700, and received from the bank a pass book entitled, "No. 133-269. Frank Denigan or Ellen Denigan in Account with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society." There is no evidence of the form in which the account was opened upon the books of the bank, but it is assumed that it was opened in the same form in which it was entered upon the pass book. February 27, 1888, an additional deposit of $1,300 was made with the bank, and entered upon the pass book. Frank Denigan was the husband of Ellen, and at the times of the above deposits the moneys so deposited were the separate property of Ellen. She died July 3, 1896, and at the time of her death the moneys so deposited, together with $56.25 interest that had accumulated thereon, remained with the bank to the credit of the above account. October 19, 1896, her surviving husband caused $2,413.33 to be transferred upon the books of the bank from this account to a new account, and received from the bank a pass book entitled, "No. 212,145. Francis Denigan or James Denigan in Account with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society." James Denigan was the nephew of Francis, and the reason assigned for this transfer was so that on the death of Francis the nephew could distribute the amount then in bank to himself and his two sisters. November 28, 1897, Francis gave to one M. D. Connelly the pass book last named, with an order in writing directing the bank to pay to Connelly, out of said deposit, the sum of $1,000, and upon the presentation of this order with the pass book that amount was upon the next day paid to him. Francis Denigan died November 29, 1897, and this payment was not made until after his death. Thereafter James Denigan, the plaintiff herein, presented the pass book to the bank, and demanded the payment of the amount of said account, without any deduction for the amount paid to Connelly, and, upon the refusal of the bank, commenced the present action to recover from it the sum of $2,463. After the death of Francis Denigan, the court appointed a special administrator of his estate, who thereupon notified the bank that he claimed the money held under this deposit, and at the instance of the bank was made a party defendant, and filed an answer setting forth the claim of the estate to the money. Letters of administration upon the estate of Ellen Denigan were issued to A. C. Freese, the public administrator, and he filed a complaint in intervention claiming the money in behalf of his intestate. The cause was tried by the court, and findings of fact made by it to the effect that the money originally deposited by Ellen was her separate estate, and that her husband never acquired any title or interest therein; that the transfer by her husband of said deposit to the account of himself and the appellant herein was without any right or authority; and that said transfer was without any consideration moving from the appellant. The court found that the sum of $1,463.33 of said deposit still remains in the possession of the bank, and that it was the separate property of Ellen, and an asset of her estate, and that the intervener was entitled to recover the same. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the intervener for this amount against the bank, and that neither the plaintiff nor the estate of Francis Denigan had any right to any portion of said money. From this judgment and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff's right to the money depends entirely upon the title or right which Francis Denigan had thereto. The plaintiff gave no consideration therefor, and can sustain his right to this money only by showing that Francis had acquired a title thereto superior to that of the personal representatives of Ellen. As it was conceded at the trial that at the time the money was deposited by Ellen it was her separate property, it was incumbent upon any one setting up a claim thereto against her personal representative to show that he had in some way acquired her title. There is nothing in the record herein showing any declarations or conversation respecting the purpose of making the deposit in the form in which it was made, or the circumstances under which the deposit was made. Both of the parties to the transaction are dead, and the only fact that is urged in support of the plaintiff's claim that Ellen parted with her title to the money is the form in which the account was opened and in which the pass book was issued by the bank. The claim by the appellant that she thereby made a gift of the money to her husband is untenable. It is not shown that the husband had any possession of the bank book until after the death of his wife, and the authorities which hold that, under certain circumstances, the delivery of a savings-bank book is a constructive or symbolical delivery of the money represented by it, and which are cited by the appellant in support of his claim that there was a gift to the husband, are inapplicable. Possession of a bank book may be a circumstance in determining the ownership of the money represented by it, but is not of itself determinative of that fact, in the absence of any evidence as to how the possession was obtained. Possession is not the equivalent of delivery. There may be possession where there has been no delivery, but there cannot be a valid delivery of a chattel unless it is accompanied by possession, actual or constructive; and, as it was not shown that the bank book was ever delivered by Ellen to her husband, one of the essential elements of a gift is wanting. There is no presumption in favor of a gift (Grey v. Grey, 47 N. Y. 552; White v. Warren, 120 Cal. 322, 49 Pac. 129, and 52 Pac. 723); and in the present case the idea of a gift is inconsistent with the retention by the wife of the right in herself to withdraw the whole of the money from the bank. A valid gift goes into immediate effect, and has no reference to the future. It divests the donor of his title, and requires a renunciation on his part of all claim and interest in the subject of the gift.

The form in which the deposit was made is entirely consistent with a desire on the part of the wife to give to her husband authority to withdraw money from the bank from time to time as she might need it, and it should not be held that she intended to part with her title thereto by reason of an ambiguous phrase, which is quite consistent with a contrary purpose. In re Ward, 2 Redf. Sur. 251; Orr v. McGregor, 43 Hun, 528; Shuttleworth v. Winter, 55 N. Y. 624; Marshall v. Crutwell, L. R. 20 Eq. 328; Beaver v. Beaver, 117 N. Y. 421, 22 N. E. 940, 6 L. R. A. 403; In re Bolin, 136 N. Y. 177, 32 N. E. 626; Flanagan v. Nash, 185 Pa. St. 41, 39 Atl. 818. When the claim of a gift is not asserted until after the death of the alleged donor, it should be sustained by clear and satisfactory evidence of every element which is requisite to constitute a gift. De Puy v. Stevens, 37 App. Div. 293, 55 N. Y. Supp. 810; Whalen v. Milholland (Md.) 43 Atl. 45, 44 L. R. A. 208. Upon the evidence before it, the superior court properly held that the title of Ellen to the moneys in the bank had not been divested at the time of her death, and that the administrator of her estate was entitled to judgment against the bank for the recovery of these moneys.

The appellant urges, in further support of his appeal, that the bank was not authorized to make the payment of $1,000 to Connelly, and that the judgment in favor of the bank to that extent is erroneous. As we hold, however, that the appellant has no interest in the moneys that were deposited with the bank by Ellen, he is not in a position to question the correctness of the judgment. The administrator of the estate of Ellen has not appealed from the judgment, and, as between him and the bank, the action of the court is not open to review. The judgment and order are affirmed.

DENIGAN v. SAN FRANCISCO SAV. UNION et al. (FREESE, Intervener.
S. F. 1,826).

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1899.)
GIFTS—DEPOSIT IN BANK—SURVIVORSHIP—JOINT TENANCY.

1. Where a wife deposits money, her separate property, in a bank, the account being opened in the names of the husband and wife, "payable to either," that fact alone does not import a gift to the husband; there being no evidence tending to show a purpose or intention on the wife's part to pass the title.

2. A deposit in a bank, made by the wife, of money which is her separate property, in the names of the husband and wife, "payable to either," does not give the husband such a joint interest in the deposit as to enable him, as survivor, to maintain a claim thereto against the wife's administrator.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by James Denigan against the San Francisco Savings Union. The administrator of the estate of Frank Denigan was substituted as defendant, and A. C. Freese, as administrator of the estate of Ellen Denigan, intervened. Judgment for intervener. From an order granting a new trial, intervener appeals. Reversed.

J. D. Sullivan and John O'Gara, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins and James Gartlan, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. The questions presented upon this appeal are similar to those involved in the case of Denigan v. Society (S. F. 1,737, just decided) 59 Pac. 389. Ellen Denigan died July 3, 1896, and at the time of her death there was on deposit in the San Francisco Savings Union certain money standing upon the books of the bank in the names of herself and her husband, Frank Denigan, payable to the order of either of them. It was admitted at the trial that this account originated in a single deposit of $3,000, made by her in this form February 27, 1888, and that at the time of the deposit it was her separate property. October 19, 1896, Frank Denigan caused the sum of $1,400 to be transferred upon the books of the bank from this account to a new account entitled, "Frank Denigan or James Denigan," with directions to the bank from both Frank and James to pay to the individual order of either. Frank Denigan died in December, 1897, and after his death the plaintiff brought the present action to recover from the bank the amount of the deposit. Under an order of the court, the administrator of the estate of Frank Denigan was substituted as defendant in place of the bank, and the bank was permitted to pay into court the amount of the deposit, and was thereupon discharged from liability therefor. The administrator of the estate of Ellen Denigan filed a complaint in intervention claiming the deposit as a part of her estate. The cause was tried by the court, and findings made to the effect that the money was the separate property of Ellen, and that her husband never had any interest therein other than as agent to withdraw the same for her and for her benefit; that the withdrawal by him of the $1,400, and the opening of the new account with the bank therefor, was without right; that the plaintiff herein paid no consideration for said transfer and had no right to said money. Judgment was accordingly rendered in favor of the intervenor for the amount that had been paid into court. Subsequently the court set aside its decision, and granted a new trial. From this order the intervenor has appealed.

The record does not show upon what grounds a new trial was asked, or upon which the court set aside its decision, and no error of law is assigned in the bill of exceptions, but it is stated therein that the evidence is insufficient in certain particulars to justify the decision. The particular in which it is suggested upon the appeal that the decision is not sustained by the evidence is that in its decision the court found that at the death of Ellen, and for a long time prior thereto, the deposit stood on the books of the bank "payable to either Ellen Denigan or Frank Denigan," whereas it appears from the evidence that the deposit stood upon the books "in the names of Frank Denigan and Ellen Denigan, his wife, and payable to the order of either of them." Although the finding upon this point is not as extensive as the evidence, it cannot be said that so far as it is made it is not sustained by the evidence. It is, however, stated in the brief for the appellant that the decision was set aside by reason of the fact that the deposit made by Ellen in the names of herself and her husband, payable to either, indicated an intention to give to him one-half of the deposit. The respondent, moreover, contends that by this form of the deposit a joint interest therein was created in favor of both, and that by virtue of the husband's survivorship he became vested with a right to the entire deposit.

What has been said in the opinion in Denigan v. Society, in reference to the proposition that by the deposit Ellen made a gift to her husband is applicable here. As therein shown, there is nothing, aside from the form in which the deposit account was opened, to show any intention on her part to part with her interest in the money, or to establish any of the elements of a completed gift. The only difference between the forms of the deposits in the two cases is that in the present case the account was opened in the name of "Francis and Ellen Denigan, payable to either," whereas in the other case the account and pass book were entitled, "Frank Denigan or Ellen Denigan in account with the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society." This difference in the form of the deposit or of the account does not, however, change the rule governing the rights of the parties to the money deposited. At the time of the deposit in each case the money was the separate property of Ellen, and, in the absence of any evidence tending to show a purpose or intention on her part to part with the title, it remained her separate property at the time of her death, notwithstanding its deposit in this form. The burden was upon the plaintiff to show that it had ceased to be her separate property, and in the absence of any evidence tending thereto, his claim must be denied. In Taylor v. Henry, 48 Md. 550, the deposit stood upon the books of the bank, "Joseph Henry, Margaret Taylor, and the survivor of them, subject to the order of either." The money was the property of Joseph Henry at the time it was deposited, and upon his death his sister Margaret claimed it by virtue of this form of the account. The court held that she was not entitled to it, saying: "The whole question depends upon the meaning and intention of the deceased in making the deposit in the form adopted, as gathered from the entry in the bank book and all the circumstances surrounding the deceased at the time;" and, after holding that the words, "and the survivor of them," did not import a gift, said: "Here the deposit was in the joint names of the deceased and his sister, and the survivor of them, but subject to the order of either. Having thus retained the power to draw out the money, the deceased did not divest himself of dominion and control over the fund. He could have drawn out every dollar after the deposit, or at any time up to the moment of his death, and applied it in any manner he might have thought proper. It is not contended that the sister had the least right or interest in the money before the deposit; nor is it contended that she acquired any interest therein otherwise than by the supposed gift of the brother; and the only evidence relied on to support the factum of the supposed gift is the form of the entry in the bank book. But, as will be observed, there are no terms in the entry that import of themselves an actual present donation by the brother to the sister, and the dominion retained by the brother over the fund enabled him to displace and utterly destroy all power conferred upon the sister in respect to the fund." The same principle was afterwards maintained in Gorman v. Gorman, 87 Md. 338, 39 Atl. 1038. In Schick v. Grote, 42 N. J. Eq. 352, 7 Atl. 852, a deposit had been made in the following form: "Bank for Savings in account with August Grote and wife, Edvina, or either." The money was the property of Mr. Grote, and after his death it was claimed in a suit for the same by his wife, that by depositing it in this form he had made her a gift of it. The court held otherwise, saying: "The form of the account in which the deposit was made is not evidence of gift to the wife." In Noyes v. Institution, 164 Mass. 583, 42 N. E. 103, it was held that a deposit by Annie M. Pike, under an account headed, "Annie M. Pike and Mary L. Hewett, payable to either or the survivor," remained the property of the original depositor, and that after her death her executors were entitled to the same. The cases cited by the respondent do not contravene the rule held in the above cases. In Mack v. Bank, 50 Hun, 477, 3 N. Y. Supp. 441, cited by him, there was testimony before the court tending to show that after the deposit had been made the depositor came to the bank with his mother, and had the account changed to their joint names, and afterwards made a gift of the deposit to her. In Bank v. Murphy, 82 Md. 315, 33 Atl. 640, the only question presented for determination was the liability of the bank upon its contract. At the time the deposit was made there was written at the head of the account in the bank book, at the request of the depositor, an agreement that at the death of either the balance should belong to the survivor. After his death the bank paid the balance to the other. In an action by his executors against the bank to recover the deposit, judgment was given in favor of the bank upon the ground that in making the payment to the survivor the bank had merely carried out its contract, and could not be required to pay the same again.

The respondent's claim that Francis became vested with Ellen's title to the deposit by virtue of his survivorship is equally untenable. Title by survivorship exists only when the estate is held in joint ownership, and, unless the deposit was owned by Francis in the lifetime of Ellen jointly with her, there was no joint interest therein to which the incident of survivorship could attach. We have seen that she did not part with her title to the deposit by reason of the form in which it was made, and, as the title of Francis depends entirely thereon, it is evident that he had no joint interest with her in the moneys so deposited. Joint interests or estates are such as are acquired at the same time and by the same title. Section 683, Civ. Code, declares: "A joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants." The proposition of the respondent that this section applies only to real estate is without support. There is no limitation of this character in the section, and, as it is found in the title headed "Ownership" and the chapter thereof which treats of "Interests in Property," irrespective of its character, it must be held applicable to all kinds of property. The money deposited by Ellen was up to that time her separate property, and it cannot be said that she then acquired any interest therein; and, if it could be assumed that by reason of the form in which the deposit was made Francis acquired any interest therein, it was acquired at a different time and by a different title from that of Ellen. There was no declaration that the money should be held in joint tenancy, and the words, "payable to either," placed in the account, take away the claim of a joint interest. In Gorman v. Gorman, supra, the entry of the deposit made in the book was "Theresa McConnell and her niece, Maggie S. Gorman, joint owners, payable to the order of either or the survivor." The money was the individual property of Theresa, and the account was changed upon the books of the bank into this form at her request, and the entry was signed by her and Miss Gorman. The court held that, although the words "joint owners" were employed, the deposit did not become the joint property of both. In Taylor v. Henry, supra, the court refused to sustain the claim of the sister by virtue of her survivorship, upon the ground that the gift was not perfect and irrevocable during the life of the donor. The same rule was observed in Milholland v. Whalen (Md.) 43 Atl. 43, 44 L. R. A. 205.

The respondent further urges that upon the deposit in the bank the money became the property of the bank, and that by virtue of the transaction then effected a chose in action resulted wherein a joint liability was created on the part of the bank in favor of Ellen and her husband, which, upon the death of Ellen, survived to the husband, and in support of this proposition cites section 1431, Civ. Code, which provides that a right created in favor of several persons is presumed to be joint and not several, and that this presumption can be overcome only by express words to the contrary. This provision has reference, however, merely to the relation between the parties in whose favor the right is created and the party against whom it is created. It is correlative to the obligation incurred by the party against whom the right exists, but does not purport to determine the interest of the parties in whose favor the right exists as between themselves. As Ellen did not divest herself of her property in the money by the form in which she made the deposit, she retained the same interest in this property represented by the chose in action or right resulting from the obligation thereby assumed by the bank. Her husband acquired no right to the money which he might obtain upon this chose in action as against her. While the bank would have been authorized to pay all or any portion of it to him in her lifetime, he could have been compelled to account to her for what he might thus receive; and, in an action against the bank wherein the claim of each is presented for adjudication, the court is authorized to render a judgment according to their respective rights. The right of action on a bond held by two joint obligees, or on a promise for the payment of money to two joint promisees, vests in the death of one in the survivor (1 Pars. Cont. 31), but the right of the deceased obligee or promisee is not extinguished by his death. The survivor will hold the security and the proceeds as trustee to the extent of the interest of the deceased joint obligee or promisee in the debt or fund, and, if the survivor had no interest in the fund, he will hold the whole thereof for the benefit of the estate of the deceased. Mulcahy v. Bank, 89 N. Y. 435. Mr. Freeman, in his treatise on Co-Tenancy and Partition, says (in section 16): "The loan of money, for which a mortgage is given, is not regarded as a transaction which would ordinarily raise the presumption that the parties thereby intended to create a joint ownership in the thing lent, with the benefit of survivorship." In Blake v. Sanborn, 8 Gray, 154, an action to foreclose a mortgage given to four persons to secure a note payable to them was held to be properly maintained by the survivors, but the court said: "If the conditional judgment is discharged by payment, they will, of course, be answerable over to the administrator of the deceased mortgagee for one-fourth of the note; if the mortgage is foreclosed, they will hold the land in trust for all concerned in the mortgage." See, also, Burnett v. Pratt, 22 Pick. 556; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1206; Bliss, Code Pl. (3d Ed.) § 62. Counsel for respondent cites in support of his claim Sanford v. Sanford, 45 N. Y. 723, where the husband loaned certain money and received therefor a promissory note payable to himself and his wife, and in which it is said in the opinion: "Taking this note in the name of himself and wife shows that the husband intended thereby to give it to her in case she survived him, and a delivery to her was unnecessary to perfect the gift." But we are compelled to coincide with Judge Redfield, who, in commenting upon this in Re Ward, 2 Redf. Sur. 251, said that this language "seems to run directly counter to all settled notions of the law in respect to such gifts, and seems not to have been fortified by the learned judge who delivered that opinion by any authority." The language above quoted is to be regarded rather as dictum than as authority, since, after stating that the note belonged to the wife as the survivor, it held, for other reasons, that the maker owed it to the estate of the husband, and not to the wife, and reversed a judgment in her favor, upon the ground that she was not the real party in interest. We hold, therefore, that Francis Denigan had no interest in the deposit during the lifetime of his wife, and did not upon her death become vested with any interest therein as against the claim of her administrator, and that, as the evidence incorporated in the bill of exceptions would not have authorized a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the court erred in setting aside its decision. The order granting a new trial is reversed.

MERCED BANK v. IVETT. (Sac. 600.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1899.)

BANKS AND BANKING—LIQUIDATION—PREFERRED CREDITORS—CORPORATIONS.

1. The fact that the board of directors of a bank had resolved to go into liquidation does not render invalid an agreement afterwards made by which it preferred a certain creditor.

2. Civ. Code, § 3432, providing that a "debtor" may prefer creditors, includes corporations as well as partnerships and individuals.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

Action by the Merced Bank against Sophie A. Ivett to recover collateral securities. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

P. J. Hazen, for appellant. J. W. Knox, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. Merced Bank, a corporation, passed resolutions resolving to go into liquidation. At this time the Bank of British Columbia was its creditor, holding collateral in the form of promissory notes as security for the debt. One Ivett was also a creditor of the Merced Bank to the extent of about $20,000. The Bank of British Columbia was threatening to realize upon its collaterals, whereupon the Merced Bank entered into a contract with Ivett whereby he was to pay off the claim of this bank, take up these collaterals, and hold them as security for the money advanced, and also as security for his claim of $20,000. This contract was carried out. At this time it may be conceded the Merced Bank was insolvent. Some eight months after this transaction the Merced Bank was thrown into liquidation under the banking act of this state by a decree of court, and thereafter it brought this action against this defendant as successor in interest of Ivett, in claim and delivery, to recover the possession of these collaterals, having first paid her the amount theretofore advanced to the Bank of British Columbia. To sustain its claim, plaintiff relies upon the proposition that it was insolvent at the time the contract was entered into with Ivett, and therefore had no right to prefer him as a creditor. There are various questions discussed by counsel incidental to the main one, but we pass them by without consideration.

We attach no importance to the fact that this bank had resolved to go into liquidation. This was a purely voluntary action upon its part, and in no way changed the relative status of itself and its creditors. The board of directors that resolved the bank into liquidation at the next regular meeting had the same power to resolve it out of liquidation. Indeed, it is not an unusual practice for solvent banks to resolve themselves into liquidation. This court held in the very recent case of Lanz v. Bank (Cal.) 58 Pac. 63, that a voluntary liquidation upon the part of a bank does not change its status as to creditors, and that the doors of the courts still remain open for them to secure their rights in the usual and ordinary channels. It has been held in this state in Bonney v. Tilley, 109 Cal. 346, 42 Pac. 439, that the directors of a banking corporation may not prefer themselves as creditors, but the question as to the preference of one ordinary, common creditor over another has never been decided. Indeed, it is apparent, at a glance, that the position occupied by directors of an insolvent corporation, when creditors, is widely variant from that occupied by the ordinary creditor.

There is a wide conflict of authority upon the question as to whether or not insolvent corporations may prefer one creditor above another; and this conflict of authority largely presents itself between the text writers upon the one side, and judicial decisions upon the other. As opposed to the doctrine of preference, we find Tayl. Priv. Corp. §§ 668-759; Mor. Priv. Corp. § 803; Wait, Insolv. Corp. § 162; and Thomp. Corp. § 6492 et seq. As opposed to the views of these text writers, we find the following statement made in that excellent work, the American & English Encyclopedia of Law (volume 7, p. 742): "In most jurisdictions, however, this doctrine is repudiated, and it is held that in the absence of charter or statutory restrictions, and in the absence of actual fraud, every corporation, though insolvent, and though it has ceased or determined to cease doing business, may prefer certain creditors over others, whenever a natural person can do so." Then follows a citation of cases supporting the text of the author, taken from 26 different states. This long list of authorities may be supplemented by the very recent case of Grand De Tour Plow Co. v. Rude Bros. Mfg. Co. (Kan. Sup.) 55 Pac. 848, where the subject is ably treated. The same general doctrine is also indorsed by the supreme court of the United States in the late case of Hollins v. Iron Co., 150 U. S. 371, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113. We also find that at the present time the states of Michigan, New York, and a few others have express statutory provisions prohibiting corporations from preferring creditors. This legislation seems fairly to indicate that the law in those states was deemed otherwise prior to the enactment of such statutes.

It would seem that in this state we are not directly concerned as to the general principles of law governing cases of the class here presented. Beyond question, the whole matter is one under legislative control, and the legislature of this state, recognizing that fact, has dealt with it accordingly. Section 3432 of the Civil Code provides: "A debtor may pay one of the creditors in preference to another, or may give to one creditor security for the payment of his demand in preference to another." The term "debtor" is a broad one, and must include corporations likewise with individuals and partnerships. We know of no principle of construction which would justify this court in holding that the word "debtor," as here used, does not include corporations. Upon the contrary, we are satisfied there is none. The conclusion is irresistible that this statute gives corporations, equally with individuals, the right to prefer one creditor above another. If the policy of such a law is unsound, the remedy is with the state legislature. For the foregoing reasons, the order denying a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded.

KRAMM v. BOGUE et al. (Sac. 676.)

SCHOOLS—RIGHT TO PRIVILEGES—PLEADING—REGISTRATION—ANNEXATION OF SCHOOL DISTRICT—EXTINGUISHMENT OF OLD DISTRICT—DEMURRER.

1. In an action by a father against the board of education of a city, a complaint alleging that plaintiff is a resident of the city school district, and that defendants had refused to permit the son to attend the schools of such city, is not defective in not alleging that the son has been prevented from attending a public school, as, if they are residents of the city school district, the child had a legal right to attend the schools in that district, and it will not be presumed that by some special arrangement he was permitted to attend a public school in a district in which he did not reside.

2. In an action by a father against the board of education of a city, which had denied plaintiff's son the privileges of the public schools of the city, where it is alleged that the father is a resident of the city school district, the child is prima facie entitled to the privileges of the school, and any reason which would justify the board in refusing the child such privileges is a matter of defense, and need not be negated in the complaint.

3. Under Pol. Code, § 1683, providing that pupils must be admitted to the schools in the order in which they are registered; and section 1617, subd. 14, which makes it the duty of the board of education to keep a register, open to the inspection of the public, of all children applying for admission, and entitled to be admitted, into the public schools, and to receive such children in the order in which they are registered,—the teacher must receive the pupils registered by the board of education in the order in which they are registered, and not in the order of the applications to the teacher.

4. Pol. Code, § 1576, provides that whenever a city shall be incorporated the board of supervisors of the county may annex thereto, for school purposes only, the remainder, or any part of the remainder, of the district or districts from which such city or incorporated town was organized, whenever a majority of the heads of families residing therein shall petition for such annexation. A city was reincorporated, and added to its territory a part of the territory of an adjoining school district. Subsequently the board of supervisors of the county, by an order made pursuant to a petition signed by a majority of the heads of families in the district, annexed the part of the school district not included in the city by the reincorporation to the city for school purposes only. Held that, as section 1576 applies to cities already incorporated, a resident of the part of the old district not included in the city territory, but annexed thereto for school purposes, is entitled to the privileges of the city's schools.

5. Such annexation for school purposes of the territory not already incorporated as a part of the city operated to extinguish the old school district.

6. In an action by a resident of the part of a school district which had been annexed to a city for school purposes against the board of education of a city, which had denied plaintiff's son the privileges of the city schools, an allegation that he is a resident of the N. district (that being the name of the old district) will be construed as an allegation that he is a resident of the territory formerly composing N. district, where another paragraph of the complaint alleged that said N. school district, ever since the date of annexation, has been, and is now, a part of the city school district.

7. Ambiguity in a pleading cannot be taken advantage of by a general demurrer.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by Philip Kramm against A. R. Bogue and others, constituting the board of education of the city of Stockton, to have it adjudged that plaintiff's son is entitled to the privileges and benefits of the public schools of said city. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Nichol, Orr & Mutter, for appellant. E. R. Thompson and J. G. Swinnerton, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. The defendants constitute the board of education of the city of Stockton, and this action was brought to have it adjudged that plaintiff's son, Frederick W. Kramm, aged 11 years, is entitled to the privileges and benefits of the public schools of said city, and to require the defendants to admit him thereto. Defendants demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff electing to stand upon his complaint, judgment was entered against him, and from that judgment he appeals.

An outline of the facts shown by the complaint may be briefly stated as follows: Prior to the reincorporation of the city of Stockton, in 1870, there was a school district, adjacent to the city, known as "North School District." By the act of reincorporation, a portion of said district was added to, and became part of, the city; the added territory including certain real estate, the property of said North school district. In 1872 an act was passed "to provide for the settlement of the value of school property in the several school districts that were adjacent to the city of Stockton, and which was, by act of the legislature approved January 26, 1870, included within the limits of said city." St. 1871-72, p. 530. In March, 1882, the trustees of said North school district conveyed to the board of education of the city of Stockton its school property, described as the south half of block 147, in said city, "in consideration that the residents of all that territory known as 'North School District,' in said county, shall forever have all the rights and privileges of the public schools of the city of Stockton," said property to be held in trust for the use of the public schools of said city. In said conveyance, said North school district further agreed that all the school money thereafter apportioned to said North school district should be paid to said board of education. The property so conveyed is alleged to have been then of the value of $10,000, and now of the value of $30,000; that the school funds apportioned to said district have been ever since paid to the board of education; that on said land so conveyed there was at that time a school house in which was conducted the public school of said district, and from that time, until the exclusion of plaintiff's son, the children of the residents of said North district enjoyed the privileges and benefits of the city schools. The plaintiff further alleged that on April 5, 1897, a petition was duly made and presented to the board of supervisors of the county of San Joaquin, praying that all that part of said North district which was not included in the corporate limits of the city of Stockton be annexed to said city for school purposes only; that said petition was signed by a majority of the heads of families residing in said portion sought to be annexed, and that said board of supervisors, at a regular session held on said 5th day of April, 1897, by an order duly adopted, made, and passed, did annex to said city, for school purposes only, all of said remainder of said North district, and that the same ever since has been, and is now, part of the school district of the city of Stockton; that on October 24, 1898, plaintiff applied to said defendants for the admission of his said son to the schools of said city, and that his said application was refused, for the alleged reason, and none other, that this plaintiff and his said child did not reside within the corporate limits of the city of Stockton; and that his said child has ever since been excluded from said schools, wrongfully and unlawfully, for the reason aforesaid, and not otherwise.

Respondent contends that it does not appear that plaintiff's child has been deprived of any school privileges, in that it does not appear "that he has been prevented from attending a public school." If, as alleged, the plaintiff and his son reside in Stockton school district, plaintiff had a legal right to have his child attend the schools in that district, and it will not be presumed that by some special arrangement he was permitted to attend a school in a district in which he did not reside. Besides, the refusal of defendants to admit him to the Stockton schools was not based upon any such reason, but was based upon the ground that he was not a resident of the city of Stockton; but if, being a resident of Stockton district, any reason existed which justified the refusal to admit him, it was a matter of defense, not proper to be anticipated in the complaint.

It is also contended that no proper application to be admitted is shown by the complaint to have been made; that the application must be made to the teacher of the school; that the scholar must be registered, and admitted in the order in which applications are made. Pol. Code, § 1683, is cited to this point. That section only provides that "pupils must be admitted to the schools in the order in which they are registered." It does not provide that the application shall be made to the teacher; but the Political Code defines the powers and duties of trustees of school districts and of boards of education in cities, and makes it their duty "to keep a register, open to the inspection of the public, of all children applying for admission and entitled to be admitted into the public schools, and to notify the parents or guardians of such children when vacancies occur, and receive such children into the school in the order in which they are registered." Id. § 1617, subd. 14. It is the pupils thus registered by the board of education which the teacher must receive "in the order in which they are registered."

It is not necessary now to consider or decide whether the contract of March 27, 1882, contained in the conveyance made by the trustees of North school district to the board of education, was within the power of said trustees and board, either under the general statute or under the act of 1872. If the action of the board of supervisors in adding the remainder of said North district to the city for school purposes was authorized and regular, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed for, whether the same right existed under said contract or not; but if it be assumed that said contract was invalid, and conferred no legal right upon the inhabitants of that portion of the original district which is now outside of the corporate limits of the city to send their children to the city schools, it nevertheless furnished a strong equitable ground for the action of the board of supervisors in annexing it to the city for school purposes. That, however, is not sufficient to sustain their action, if such annexation is not authorized by law. Section 1576 of the Political Code, so far as material here, is as follows: "Every city or incorporated town, unless subdivided by the legislative authority thereof, shall constitute a separate school district, which shall be governed by the board of education or board of school trustees of such city or incorporated town; provided, that whenever a city or town shall be incorporated the board of supervisors of the county may annex thereto, for school purposes only, the remainder, or any part of the remainder, of the district or districts from which such city or incorporated town was organized whenever a majority of the heads of families residing therein, as shown by the last preceding school census, shall petition for such annexation. * * *" Respondent contends that "this section does not, in terms, apply to cities already incorporated." This construction is too narrow. North school district was wholly outside of the incorporated city of Stockton until said city was reincorporated, with enlarged boundaries, which included a part of said district. As to the added territory, it was a new corporation then first formed. It is obvious that a division of a school district, by adding a portion of it to an adjacent municipality, produces precisely the same conditions which would be created by the incorporation of a new city or town, which divided the same district in the same manner. The conditions being the same in each case, the remedy is appropriate. This provision of the Code, as well as all others, "are to be liberally construed, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." Civ. Code, § 4. "The letter of remedial statutes may be extended to include cases clearly within the mischief they were intended to remedy, unless such construction does violence to the language used." Suth. St. Const., § 348. The case of School Dist. v. Linscott, 99 Cal. 25, 33 Pac. 781, cited by respondent, has no application here. It involved no question as to the power of the board of supervisors to annex territory for school purposes. This action of the board of supervisors was not a change of boundaries of school districts, under section 1577, Pol. Code, as suggested, and the provisions of the Code relating thereto do not apply.

It is also said that the trustees of North school district are not alleged to have consented to the application of plaintiff's son to attend the schools of Stockton school district. All that remained of North district having been annexed to the city for school purposes, there was thereafter no North district nor any trustees of it. Under the allegations of the complaint, the plaintiff, when he made the demand that his son be admitted to the Stockton school, was a resident of Stockton school district. It is true, as said by respondent, that in the second paragraph of the complaint it is said that the son, Frederick, during said time and is now residing in North school district. The evident meaning is that he was and is now residing in what was North school district. Afterwards, in the tenth paragraph, after alleging the said action by the board of supervisors, it is alleged that "all of said remainder of said North school district ever since has been and is now a part of the said school district of the city of Stockton." No one, we think, could be misled by said allegations, or misunderstand the plaintiff's case. Such faults in pleading are not reached by a general demurrer. I advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

STEVENS v. TRUMAN, Treasurer.
(S. F. 1,973.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1899.)

MANDAMUS—COMPLAINT—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CLAIMS—STATUTES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—REPEAL.

1. The failure to allege, in a complaint for a peremptory mandate to a city treasurer requiring defendant to pay a certain order, that there was money in the treasury out of which to pay the order, or that defendant was able to comply with the writ, is not reversible error, where, at the trial, defendant admitted there were funds in the treasury to the credit of the general fund greatly in excess of plaintiff's claim, and the case was tried upon the theory that the condition of the various funds was at issue, and no objections to the findings touching the amounts to the credit of those funds were urged.

2. It is not necessary to the payment of a claim against the city and county of San Francisco that it be presented to and audited by its auditor.

3. It is not necessary to the validity of an order on the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco, given by its superior court to the phonographic reporter of such court for his services, that it should have designated the fund out of which to make payment, since Code Civ. Proc. § 274, directs payment in such cases to be made "out of the treasury of the county in which the case is tried, upon the order of the court."

4. Code Civ. Proc. § 274, which provides that when, in criminal cases, the testimony has been taken down and transcribed upon the order of the court, the fees of the reporter shall be certified by the court, and upon its order paid out of the treasury of the county, or city and county, in which the case is tried, does not contravene article 3, § 1, of the constitution, in that it confers legislative power upon the judicial department of the government.

5. Act March 21, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 218), which attempts to amend Code Civ. Proc. § 274, by undertaking to make the phonographic reporter a salaried officer of the court, and to give the judge of the court the power to fix his monthly salary, is unconstitutional, in that it delegates to the judge the legislative power to fix a monthly salary for future services to be rendered.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Application for writ of mandamus by Joseph P. Stevens against I. J. Truman, as treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment granting such writ, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. J. Truman and J. H. Dickinson, for appellant. Geo. D. Collins, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal from a judgment for a peremptory writ of mandate ordering appellant to pay to plaintiff $117 for services as the regular phonographic reporter in department 12 of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff was duly appointed the phonographic reporter of the above-named court. He performed services as such, under order of the court, in certain felony cases, and transcribed the testimony, the value of which services was found to be the above amount. Thereafter, to wit, on April 8, 1899, he served upon defendant an order of the court, duly given and made, accompanied by a certificate of said services and their value, directing defendant to pay the said amount, which defendant refused to do. The matter was heard before Judge Carroll Cook, who gave judgment for plaintiff, and ordered the writ to issue, commanding defendant to pay plaintiff the amount claimed "out of the treasury of the said city and county of San Francisco." Appellant attacks the judgment upon the following grounds: (1) By demurrer, for insufficiency of the complaint; (2) section 274, Code Civ. Proc., as passed in 1880, is unconstitutional; (3) the order appointing plaintiff as the regular official reporter of the court is void, as the power to appoint was taken away from the court by the act of March 21, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 218), amending said section 274; (4) the order of April 8, 1899, was not audited by the auditor of the city and county; (5) the order did not designate the fund out of which payment should be made; (6) there was no money in the treasury, because the fund out of which payment could be made was exhausted.

1. The point upon demurrer is that the petition does not state that there was money to pay the order, or that the treasurer had the ability to comply with the writ; citing Redding v. Bell, 4 Cal. 333. There was no duty put upon appellant, as treasurer, to pay the order, unless he had funds in his control applicable to that purpose; and whether he had the ability to comply with the order ought to have been shown. The rules of pleading in seeking the extraordinary aid of a mandamus require the petitioner to show a clear prima facie case to warrant the alternative writ. There should be sufficient facts stated in the petition to show that the defendant is under legal obligation or duty to perform the required act. High, Extr. Rem. §§ 449, 450; Wood, Mand. p. 18; Redding v. Bell, supra. The complaint failed to allege that there was any fund out of which plaintiff could be paid, and, was, therefore, insufficient. The defendant, however, alleged, in his answer, that there were no funds in the treasury out of which he could pay plaintiff; but at the trial defendant admitted that there were funds in the treasury to the credit of the general fund greatly in excess of plaintiff's claim, and no objection was then made to evidence being introduced upon that point, and no objection is now made to the findings of the amount of money in the treasury to the credit of that fund. The cause was tried by both parties upon the theory that the condition of the various funds was an issue in the case, and no objections to the findings are now urged as to the facts found touching the amounts to the credit of those funds. Under such circumstances we do not think that the judgment should be reversed for the failure to allege that there was money in the treasury out of which plaintiff could have been paid.

2. It was not necessary to the payment of the claim that it should have been presented to the auditor. Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 233, 30 Pac. 806. See, also, Society v. Reis, 71 Cal. 627, 12 Pac. 796; McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 363, 23 Pac. 357.

3. Nor was it necessary to the validity of the order of the court that it should have designated the fund out of which to make payment. The Code directs the payment to be made "out of the treasury of the county in which the case is tried, upon the order of the court." The duty is devolved upon the court, after having fixed the compensation to be paid, to make the order upon the treasury of the county. It is made the duty of the treasurer to "receive and safely keep * * * all moneys belonging to * * * the treasury." Section 79, Consolidation Act. The term "treasury" includes all the moneys of the municipality under the control of the treasurer, whether belonging to a designated fund or not. The act declares that "the general fund consists of all moneys in the treasury not designated and set apart to a specified use, and of the over-plus of any special fund remaining after the satisfaction of all demands upon it." Section 76. If there were no other specially designated funds, the general fund would constitute the treasury. Section 71 provides that "the general fund shall be applied and used for the payment of all sums authorized by law to be paid out of the general fund and not otherwise provided for in this act." St. 1866, p. 436. The order of the court upon the treasury, therefore, was an order for payment out of the general fund. The fact that a fund had been designated for the payment of phonographic reporters could not in any way affect the provisions of section 274, Code Civ. Proc. (amended 1880), by which it became the duty of the court to make the order upon the treasury. The board of supervisors could not defeat the law by creating a special fund, which might be inadequate to meet the payment of such claims as this, or, indeed, might be so limited as to seriously affect the administration of justice by the courts. City of San Francisco v. Broderick, 111 Cal. 302, 43 Pac. 960. The evidence is, and the court found, that when the order was presented the special fund to which moneys had been transferred for payment of such claims was exhausted, but there remained unappropriated, in the general fund, $205,757.42. We think this fund was applicable to the payment of the order of the court. Ex parte Reis, supra, and other cases cited, supra.

4. The principal point relied upon is the unconstitutionality of section 274, Code Civ. Proc., as it was enacted by the act of April 1, 1880 (St. 1880, pp. 54, 55), which reads: " * * * In criminal cases, when the testimony has been taken down or transcribed upon the order of the court, the fees of the reporter shall be certified by the court, and paid out of the treasury of the county, or city and county, in which the case is tried, upon the order of the court." This section was amended by act of March 21, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 218), in which it was undertaken to make the reporter a salaried officer of the court, and to give the judge of the court the power to fix the monthly salary. The amendment of 1885 was in some particulars held to be unconstitutional, and appellant contends in all other particulars it must stand, and therefore works the repeal of the section as it stood in 1880. Just what effect this contention, if sound, would have upon the case here, need not be considered, for we are clearly of the opinion that the amendment of 1885 has no longer a foot to stand upon. Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852; James v. McCann, 93 Cal. 513, 29 Pac. 49; Taylor v. McConigle, 120 Cal. 123, 52 Pac. 159. See, also, City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585. We do not think the section, as amended, is susceptible of division so as to preserve the portion not distinctly held to be unconstitutional, and the court has so intimated in the cases supra. We must deal alone with the section as amended in 1880. City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, supra. It is attacked as violative of section 1, art. 3, of the constitution, as conferring legislative power upon the judicial department of government. The court has frequently had this section of the Code before it, and has found in it authority both to appoint a reporter, and fix his compensation for services rendered, and order payment either by one or both of the parties, if in a civil action, or by giving an order on the treasury of the county if in a criminal case. As to the latter class of cases, see Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 233; People v. Lon Me, 49 Cal. 353; McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 361, 23 Pac. 357. As to civil cases, see Rhodes v. Spencer, 68 Cal. 199, 8 Pac. 855; Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 493, 25 Pac. 3; James v. McCann, 93 Cal. 513, 29 Pac. 49; Taylor v. McConigle, 120 Cal. 123, 52 Pac. 159; City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585. It is not reasonable to suppose that the court of last resort in all these cases unwittingly lent its aid to the enforcement of statutes which violated the constitution. It is more reasonable to assume that the court treated the statutes as constitutional. However this may be, we think the question here presented has been directly passed upon, as will be noticed later. Substantially the same legislation was put in force as early as 1861 (St. 1861, p. 497), and has been in force ever since. The section of the constitution of 1849 is identical with the section of the constitution of 1879 relied upon. While, perhaps, not conclusive, the fact that the courts have exercised the power under the old and new constitutions for nearly 40 years gives a practical construction of these instruments which ought to have great weight in determining the question if any doubt exists. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 81 et seq. Some of the various statutes which have been passed on this subject will be found in the opinions of Justices McKinstry and Thornton in Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 233, and need not be recapitulated here.

The official or phonographic reporters of superior courts are authorized to be appointed by the judge or judges of such courts under part 1, Code Civ. Proc. (sections 268-274), as the law was enacted April 1, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 53. See pp. 54, 55). The compensation to be paid reporters, except where otherwise provided by the county government act of April 1, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452), is regulated under the amendment of 1880. As to the city and county of San Francisco, and the counties of certain 16 other classes, the county government act makes no provision whatever for appointing or fixing the compensation of court reporters. In all these the act of 1880 apparently is the only law in force. In some of the other classes the county government act gives the judges the power to appoint, but the act fixes the compensation by a monthly salary in some cases and by per diem in others; but in four of these counties the provision is that the reporter "shall receive as compensation such fees as are now allowed by law." In classes 48 and 49 the county government act makes a provision still different from all the others, by which, in certain cases, the boards of supervisors may fix the compensation. The utter lack of uniformity in the law in providing for the appointment of reporters and fixing their compensation shows that the legislature has regarded these persons as a part of the machinery of the courts, rather than as officers of government in any sense. As expressed by Mr. Justice Thornton in Ex parte Reis, supra: "In view of the lawmaking power, these reporters were regarded as official adjuncts of the courts of justice," or as "ministerial officers of the courts." The reporter is not among the enumerated county officers (Pol. Code, § 4103); and, while the legislature could create the office of official reporter, and make it a county office, it has not done so in the city and county of San Francisco. The legislature has simply authorized the judge of the court to employ a person to take down and transcribe shorthand notes of court proceedings, who shall be known as "phonographic reporter of the court." In civil cases his duties cannot be said to be public in any sense. In criminal cases they may be so regarded in a limited sense, inasmuch as the services are paid for out of public funds. But rendering services for the public does not of itself make him a public officer. We do not think that the fixing of the salary of a person who performs some service for the public, nor the fact that such person is required to take an oath that he will faithfully discharge his duties, would necessarily make such person a public officer, or his employment an office.

The provisions of section 869, Pen. Code, confer powers upon the magistrate similar to those found in section 274, Code Civ. Proc. In McAllister v. Hamlin, 83 Cal. 361, 23 Pac. 357, section 869 was held to be constitutional; and it was also held that the magistrate, in fixing the compensation of the reporter, acts in a judicial, and not in a legislative, capacity.

The amendment of section 274, Code Civ. Proc., by the act of 1885, was held unconstitutional in the case of Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852, for the reason that the act undertook to confer powers upon the judge which were legislative in their nature, and could not be delegated—namely, to fix the monthly salary of the reporter for future services to be rendered. The court said: "The act of 1885 amending section 274, Code Civ. Proc., is different from the section as it stood before amended. Under the section as it stood before it was amended, the amount to be paid the reporter was fixed, on valuation of the services rendered, by the court or judge, after they have been rendered. The court or judge, under that section, acted on a case which had transpired before any action was taken. The difference between the two is plain and palpable." The court disclaimed any intention to decide that the mode provided under the act of 1880 is constitutional. We think, however, that upon the authority of McAllister v. Hamlin we must hold the act to be constitutional. It is advised that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

127 Cal. 261

PORTER v. LASSEN COUNTY LAND & CATTLE CO. et al. (Sac. 459.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1899.)

CORPORATIONS—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—VOTE—INTEREST—VACANCY—MORTGAGES—RATIFICATION—CONSTRUCTION—PLEADING.

1. Civ. Code, §§ 290, 305, 308, provide that the minimum number of directors of a corporation shall be five. Defendant corporation, which was organized with a board of five directors, executed a mortgage at a time when a vacancy in the board reduced it to four. After the vacancy was filled the mortgage was ratified by the whole board. Held, that the subsequent ratification of the mortgage by the full board validated it.

2. A mortgage was executed by a corporation when the number of its directors was reduced by a vacancy to less than that required by law. Subsequently, at meetings of full boards, the mortgagee was required to make further advances on the security of the mortgage, and a second mortgage was directed by a resolution expressly recognizing the validity of the previous one. Held sufficient to constitute a ratification of the previous mortgage.

3. Proof of ratification of an invalid mortgage is admissible under a plea alleging execution of the mortgage.

4. That a resolution of a corporate board of directors to purchase a director's interest in certain property was voted for by such director does not invalidate the resolution, where the other directors voting for it constituted a majority of the board.

5. A mortgage, after reciting the principal consideration for which it was given, contained the following clause: "Also, to secure the repayment to said party of the second part of such further advances as may be made by him to or for the use and benefit of the party of the first part, and authorized and requested by it, * * * not exceeding $30,000." Following was a provision that the mortgagee would compromise any hostile claim against the property, the costs thereof to be covered by the mortgage. Held, that the mortgagee did not promise to make a further advance of $30,000 upon simple demand, but agreed to advance such sum within that limit as might be required to compromise any hostile claim to the property.

6. That a large part of land conveyed by a mortgagee to a corporation at the date of the mortgage already belonged to the corporation is insufficient to show a failure of consideration for the mortgage, where it was given in consideration of previous advances made by the mortgagee to the corporation, and not in consideration of the land conveyed.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Action by B. F. Porter against the Lassen County Land & Cattle Company and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from an order overruling their motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Spencer & Raker, for appellants. A. E. Bolton, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been executed by the corporation defendant. The findings and judgment of the superior court were in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from an order overruling their motion for a new trial. The main controversy in the case is in regard to the execution of the note and mortgage, and in support of their appeal the defendants contend that the decision of the superior court holding that the note and mortgage were duly executed is not only contrary to the evidence, but is against law, because it appears by the findings of the court, as well as by the uncontradicted evidence, that the resolution of the directors of the corporation purporting to authorize the mortgage was passed at a time when there was a vacancy in the board reducing the number of directors from five to four. The entire contention of the appellants upon this point is based upon the proposition that a single vacancy in the board of directors renders it impossible for the remaining members to bind the corporation by their unanimous vote, however regular their proceedings may be in other respects. They further contend that, even if it should be held that a board of four directors was competent to act, the mortgage in question was invalid because given to secure the personal obligation of one of the four directors who voted for the resolution authorizing its execution. Some of their other principal contentions are that there was a lack or failure of consideration for the note which the mortgage was given to secure, and that the plaintiff induced the execution of the mortgage by making a promise which he never performed and never intended to perform, viz. that he would make further advances to the corporation to the extent of $30,000. All these propositions are contested by respondent, and, with respect to the execution of the mortgage, he contends that, even if its execution was not originally authorized by a competent board, it was nevertheless rendered valid by the subsequent ratification of a full board, and that independent of such ratification the corporation is estopped to deny its validity. For the purpose of considering these and other grounds of the appeal, it will be convenient to state in a general way the principal facts disclosed by the evidence: The articles of incorporation of the Lassen County Land & Cattle Company are not contained in the record, but from the minutes of its proceedings it appears to have been organized at some time prior to the year 1885, and to have adopted by-laws declaring that the corporate powers of the company should be exercised by a president, vice president, and board of five directors, including the president and vice-president, of whom a majority should constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The capital stock of the company was divided into 100,000 shares, of which 29,624 shares remained unissued. Of the issued stock, 69,795 shares were held by C. A. Merrill, and 581 shares stood in the names of other persons. It is very evident, not only from the distribution of the stock of the company, but from all the facts in the case, that Merrill and the corporation were substantially identical. The corporation, in other words, was a form under which Merrill transacted business. The property of the company, or of Merrill, consisted of lands, water rights, ditches, flumes, a sawmill, etc., of which Merrill appears to have had the control and management, either as president of the company or in his own right,—it is not very clear or very important which. In January, 1885, when we get a first view of its affairs, the company seems to have been in lack of funds to carry on its ordinary business or care for its property, and after several meetings of its directors, at which these matters were fully discussed, it was finally resolved at a meeting held on the 5th of February, 1885, to close its office at 324 Pine street, San Francisco. Merrill, its president, was directed to sell the office furniture and to take charge of the proceeds, and he agreed to assume all responsibility for rent and other expenses in connection with the company's business. The minutes of this meeting were then written up, read, approved, and signed by the secretary and directors present. It is not stated that the board then adjourned sine die, but such seems to have been the case; for it does not appear that they ever met again until the 28th day of April, 1889, at which date Merrill presented a report of what he had been doing in the meantime. By this report he showed that he had expended in the management and improvement of the company's property about $2,700, borrowed in his own name from B. F. Porter, the plaintiff herein. To secure this indebtedness he had conveyed to Porter all the property which he had formerly conveyed to the corporation. At the same time he entered into a written contract with Porter, a copy of which was attached to the report, by which Porter agreed to purchase other lands for Merrill's benefit, and upon repayment of all his advances, with interest, to convey to Merrill such additional lands, together with the property then conveyed to him by Merrill. All these things Merrill reported that he had done in his own name, but in the interest and for the benefit of the corporation. He reported, further, that Porter, in pursuance of the contract, had purchased 4,400 acres of land, and had advanced about $35,000. The report of Merrill upon these matters was approved, and his agreement with Porter (somewhat modified) was ratified and adopted by unanimous vote of the three directors present; but, as Merrill himself was one of the three, this attempt to ratify was clearly a failure. Afterwards, however, on October 17, 1891, there was a meeting of the stockholders at which a full board of directors was elected, by whom a president and other officers were chosen; and, having thus effected a thorough reorganization, the Porter transaction was again taken up, and negotiations were resumed for the purpose of securing a conveyance from him to the corporation of the property conveyed to him by Merrill, and the additional property purchased by him under his contract with Merrill. Pending these negotiations, at a meeting of the directors of the company November 30, 1892, one of the directors resigned, but that fact was not communicated to Porter. Several other meetings of the directors were held without filling the vacancy in the board, and, finally at a meeting held January 20, 1893 at which, according to the minutes, there were present four directors, including Merrill, the president, a preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted, wherein it was recited that the corporation was indebted to Benjamin F. Porter in the sum of $65,820.00, being the amount paid out and expended by said Porter in the development, improvement, and acquisition of title to the lands and property of this corporation in Lassen county; that the legal title to said property was vested in said Porter; that it was deemed advisable by the board to have the legal title vested in the corporation, and payment of the sums due to Porter secured by note and mortgage, etc., wherefore it was resolved that Porter be requested to convey said lands, etc., to the corporation, and that the corporation execute its note for said amount, and a mortgage of all said property, to Porter. The preamble and resolution are set out at great length in the minutes. They give the precise terms of the note and mortgage which the president and secretary were authorized and directed to make and deliver in behalf of the company, including a full and particular description of the property to be conveyed to the company and mortgaged back to Porter. In this list of property was contained a large amount of land which the corporation had never before had any claim to, except such claim as arose out of the contract between Merrill and Porter above mentioned, and also the land, water rights, etc., which had been conveyed by Merrill to Porter at the date of that contract, and which, it seems, had been previously conveyed by Merrill to the corporation. Upon the adoption of this resolution a copy was handed to Porter, with the following certificate attached: "I, R. J. Creighton, secretary of the Lassen County Land and Cattle Company, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a full, true, and correct copy of a resolution of the board of directors of said Lassen County Land and Cattle Company adopted at a special meeting of the board of directors, held at the office of the company, pursuant to due notice (a full board being present), on the 28th day of January, 1893, and that the mortgage hereunto annexed and note therein recited are full, true, and correct copies of the note and mortgage in said resolution referred to, and the said mortgage hereunto annexed is the original mortgage, the execution of which is therein and thereby authorized. Robert J. Creighton, Secretary of the Lassen County Land and Cattle Company. [Corporate Seal.]" This certificate of the regularity of the proceedings of the directors was required by Porter before he would consummate the transaction, and upon receiving it, and in reliance upon it, he executed the conveyance as requested; and the president and secretary at the same time executed and delivered to him a note and mortgage, duly acknowledged, in the precise form prescribed by the resolution of the board of directors. Thereupon the corporation entered into the possession of all the property in question, and so continued down to the trial of this action. Not only did the corporation take over from plaintiff all the real estate included in his conveyance, to a large portion of which it had no previous claim, and upon all of which he had made large expenditures under his agreement with Merrill above mentioned, but after the vacancy in the board had been filled the directors, from time to time, demanded additional advances on the security of the mortgage; and such advances were made by the plaintiff, who also paid taxes assessed to and payable by the corporation on the mortgaged premises. Said full board of directors also authorized a second mortgage of the same property to a third party, and in their resolutions expressly recognized plaintiff's mortgage as a valid and subsisting lien; and they have always claimed and retained possession of the property conveyed by Porter, together with all the advantages of his large expenditures for its care and preservation. With this preliminary statement of the principal facts of the case, we may proceed to consider the questions discussed in the briefs:

1. Can a corporation perform corporate acts, such as the mortgaging of its real property, while there is a vacancy in its board of directors? Section 305 of the Civil Code provides that the corporate powers, business, and property of all corporations must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by a board of not less than five nor more than eleven directors, and that whenever a vacancy occurs in the office of director, unless the by-laws of the corporation otherwise provide, such vacancy must be filled by an appointee of the board. Section 308 provides that a majority of the directors is a sufficient number to form a board for the transaction of business, and every decision of a majority of the directors forming such board, made when duly assembled, is a valid corporate act. Section 290 provides that the articles by which the corporation is formed shall set forth, among other things, the number of its directors or trustees, which shall not be less than five nor more than eleven. The by-laws of this corporation, and, I suppose, its articles of incorporation, provided for a board of five directors, and the question is whether during a vacancy in one of these directorships the four remaining directors could lawfully assemble for the transaction of any business except the filling of such vacancy. Counsel have not cited any case decided in this state or any other of the United States in which this question has been directly decided. In England, under a statute which is somewhat different from ours, it has been held in several cases that a corporation cannot enforce a forfeiture of shares for nonpayment of a call by a board reduced by vacancies below the minimum number of directors prescribed by the deed of incorporation. Bottomley's Case, 16 Ch. Div. 681, and cases therein cited. These cases may, however, be distinguished from the case under consideration upon two grounds: In the first place, the English statute differs from ours in an important particular. It does not require, as ours does (Civ. Code, § 290), the deed or articles of incorporation to specify exactly the number of directors who are to manage the corporate business, but permits the incorporators to designate a maximum and minimum number who may act. The shareholders (that is to say, either by the deed of incorporation or by subsequent resolution) may declare that the corporate business shall be conducted by a board of not more, for instance, than seven, nor less than five. Such was the Bottomley Case, and the board of directors had been reduced by resignations and bankruptcy to four members. It was held that the remaining four directors could not make a call upon the shareholders, or enforce it by a forfeiture of the shares. Sir George Jessel, however, in order to reconcile his decision with previous decisions of the English courts, was obliged to make a distinction between the case in which there was a maximum and minimum number of directors prescribed by the deed of incorporation, and one in which there was a mere number of directors stated, with power in a lesser number to act, and in this connection he says: "When the mere number of directors is stated, and then there are provisions showing that the directors are to meet during vacancies to fill up the number, and that they may transact business with a less number, and so on, it is obviously meant that the larger number shall be the number of directors as the normal number, but not that the business shall not be carried on with a less number; but that has no application when you find a clause that the number shall never be less than a certain number." This passage from the opinion, which is followed by more in the same line of argument, with various illustrations (pages 688, 689), is really and in effect a construction of our statute adverse to the contention of appellants; for section 305 of the Civil Code, in declaring that the corporate powers, etc., must be exercised by a board of not less than five nor more than eleven directors, adds nothing to the effect of section 290, which requires the articles of incorporation to state the number of directors of the corporation. All the provisions of the statute taken together mean this, and nothing more: That each corporation must have a fixed and definite number of directors, not less than five nor more than eleven in number, of whom a majority shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The decision in Bottomley's Case, therefore, so far from being an authority for the proposition that a California corporation cannot transact business pending a vacancy in the board of directors, is more nearly an authority against it. Another distinction between that case, with the whole line of decisions upon which it is based, and the case before us, is that they all relate exclusively to attempts to forfeit shares for nonpayment of calls. It is no doubt true that directors owe to their constituents the duty of keeping the board full, by promptly filling vacancies as they occur; and this for the reason that the shareholders are entitled to the benefit of the experience and advice of all the members of a full board in the transaction of its business. When the directors violate this duty there may be sound reasons for holding that they should not be allowed to take any advantage, as against the shareholders, of acts or resolutions passed when a full board was not in existence. But when the corporation is dealing with a stranger, who, acting in good faith and in ignorance of the existence of a vacancy in the board of directors, parts with his property on the faith of what he is induced to believe is a valid corporate obligation, the case is certainly very different in its substantial merits, if not in point of strict law.

Appellant cites the case of Moore v. Rector, etc., 4 Abb. N. C. 51, as a case directly in point; but it is not in point. There was an attempt to mortgage a church by the rector, one of the wardens, and four vestrymen. The act under which the church was incorporated required an annual election of eight vestrymen, as an essential part of the board of trustees, and declared that no board should be competent to transact business without the presence of a majority of the vestrymen. It was contended that, since there were three vacancies in the vestry, four were a majority; but the court, construing the act, held that it meant a majority of the full vestry. Our statute requiring a majority of the trustees to form a quorum should receive the same construction, but in this case four directors were present,—more than a majority of a full board,—and the resolution to mortgage was adopted by a unanimous vote of the four. Respondent, as bearing on this point, cites several cases in which the courts of New York and Pennsylvania have held valid the election of boards of directors or trustees of corporations less in number than the charters prescribed; and since these decisions necessarily involved the assumption that such boards, though curtailed in number, could carry on the corporation business, they are pretty direct authority to the effect that a board of directors is competent to act notwithstanding an existing vacancy. See In re Union Ins. Co., 22 Wend. 599; Wright v. Com., 109 Pa. St. 560, 1 Atl. 794. In the latter case it is said, "The power of a board is never suspended by vacancies unless the number be reduced below a quorum." It is not necessary to go to this extent in the present case. It would be sufficient, in order to sustain the validity of this mortgage, to say that the votes of a majority of a full board may authorize a corporate act, although there may be a vacancy in the board. I am of the opinion that this is a sound proposition, but it is not even necessary, though entirely proper, to decide the point here; for, conceding that there was a lack of power in the board of directors, as constituted on the 28th day of January, 1893, to mortgage the company's property, there was no such lack of power at subsequent meetings of full boards at which the plaintiff was required to make additional advances on the security of his mortgage, and when a second mortgage was directed by a resolution distinctly and expressly recognizing the existence and validity of plaintiff's mortgage. This was, in my opinion, a full ratification of the mortgage, and made it valid, if it was not valid at the date of its execution. Appellant cites section 2310 of the Civil Code against this conclusion, but it does not sustain him. The manner of directing the execution of a corporation mortgage is by resolution of the board of directors, and here by resolution of the board the mortgage is recognized as valid, and its benefits claimed in behalf of the corporation. It is not necessary, in order to ratify, to do so in express and formal terms. Anything is sufficient which clearly and necessarily implies a recognition of the obligation. It is objected that ratification was not pleaded. It was not necessary. A mortgage executed by the corporation was pleaded, and, to support the allegation of a mortgage, proof of a subsequent ratification was just as pertinent as proof of a prior authorization.

2. Another objection of appellant to the validity of the mortgage is based upon the fact that Merrill participated in the meeting of directors at which it was authorized, and voted in favor of the resolution. It is contended that he could not transfer his personal obligation to the company. Considering that Merrill was, as we have seen, practically the whole corporation, this objection has not much substantial merit; but, since there were a few shares of stock held by other persons, it must be considered. And it is not disposed of, like the last objection, by what was done in subsequent meetings of the directors, when all vacancies in the board had been filled; for Merrill continued to be director and president, and took part in those subsequent meetings. But in the first meeting three directors—a majority of a full board, exclusive of Merrill—voted for the mortgage, and in the subsequent meetings four members, exclusive of Merrill, voted for the resolutions recognizing its existence. The adoption of none of these resolutions depended on Merrill's vote. The votes of the other three directors were sufficient to bind the corporation, and his own vote, while expressing his assent to the arrangement, and binding him so far, had no effect in invalidating a resolution good without it.

3. Appellant contends that the mortgage was rendered invalid by the alleged fraud of plaintiff in procuring its execution by a promise to advance $30,000 in addition to the sums previously advanced,—a promise which he has never performed, and never intended to perform. The superior court finds that no such promise was made, but this finding is assailed as contrary to the evidence. The evidence cited against it consists altogether of two clauses contained in the mortgage, as follows: "And also to secure the repayment to said party of the second part of such further advances as may be made by him to or for the use and benefit of the party of the first part, and authorized or requested by it by resolution of its board of directors, not exceeding the further sum of thirty thousand dollars, exclusive of interest, over and above the amount of said above-recited promissory note; and all such further advances shall be deemed to be due and payable to the party of the second part at the maturity of said promissory note, and shall bear interest at the same rate. * * * If at any time during the existence of this mortgage there shall be made or asserted any claim against the lands and premises herein described, or any part thereof, or if any suit or action therefor or affecting the same or any part thereof, shall be commenced or threatened, the party of the second part hereby agrees that he will, and he shall have the power, and is hereby authorized to, settle and compromise the same upon such terms as may be authorized by the party of the first part, and that the moneys paid in such settlement or compromise, and for all expenses and counsel fees, shall be repaid to the mortgagee and his assigns by the party of the first part, and shall be a lien upon said lands," etc. It is perfectly clear that the plaintiff did not promise or bind himself in either of these clauses of the mortgage to make a further advance of $30,000 upon the mere demand of the corporation. The utmost that can be claimed is that he agreed to advance such sum, within the limit of $30,000, as might be required to compromise any hostile claim to the mortgaged property, when duly requested so to do by the corporation. Conceding that he made such agreement, the corporation would have no ground for complaint unless it appeared that he had refused to advance money to carry out a compromise of a conflicting claim which had been regularly approved by its board of directors. But this is not alleged. All that is said with reference to this matter in the answer filed by the corporation is that the directors had, before the commencement of the action, demanded a further advance of $30,000, and that plaintiff had refused to advance the same or any part thereof. It is true that at the trial the defendants made an offer to prove that the corporation had demanded an advance of $9,000 to carry out a compromise approved by them of a hostile claim asserted by one Marker, but this evidence was properly excluded upon the objection of the plaintiff that such matter had not been pleaded. It does not appear, therefore, that the plaintiff violated any agreement contained in the mortgage.

But, even if it had been alleged and proved that he did refuse to advance money required to carry out a compromise duly approved by the directors of the corporation, the result would not have been to render the mortgage wholly invalid and incapable of enforcement. In the absence of any rescission or attempt to rescind, the defendant would only have been entitled to recoup for the damages caused by the breach of this stipulation of the contract, and it is nowhere alleged or shown that the corporation sustained any damage by the failure to compromise the Marker claim. There was evidence admitted in the course of the trial showing that plaintiff, prior to the execution of the mortgage, had promised to advance to Merrill $3,000, to be expended in the care and preservation of the mortgaged property; and the court finds upon sufficient evidence that fully that sum was so advanced to Merrill, or upon his order. An attempt was made to show that a considerable portion of it was used for purposes foreign to the business of the corporation. But the plaintiff's promise was only that he would advance the money to Merrill, and it was Merrill's business to see that it was properly applied. As to this matter, I cannot see that the corporation has any ground of complaint, either technical or substantial.

4. The claim that there was a lack or failure of consideration for the mortgage rests upon the fact that Merrill had conveyed to the corporation a portion of the property subsequently conveyed by him to plaintiff, and by plaintiff conveyed to the corporation at the date of the mortgage. Appellant argues that since the conveyance by plaintiff was the consideration of the note, and since a large portion of the property which plaintiff assumed to convey was already the property of the corporation, there was, to the extent of the value of such property, no consideration. Here, again, the whole substance of appellant's complaint rests upon the ability of Merrill, the individual, to distinguish himself from Merrill, the corporation. But the objection is easily answered in its technical aspect. The consideration of the mortgage was not the land which plaintiff conveyed or assumed to convey, but the money he had advanced for the care and preservation of property belonging to the corporation and the acquisition of other property which he had purchased for Merrill under a contract of which the corporation desired to have the benefits. In all these matters Merrill had been acting in his own name, but for the benefit of the corporation, during the long period when it lay dormant,—from 1885 to 1889. When it came to life again, and began to act in its corporate capacity, it simply assumed Merrill's obligations incurred in the preservation of its property and the protection of its interests, at the same time appropriating to itself the benefits of what he had bargained for in his own name. As to the amount of plaintiff's advances, and the extent of Merrill's obligations thus assumed by the corporation, there is no question. His accounts were submitted to Merrill and the other directors, and their correctness was never disputed.

5. Appellants present a number of minor points in their brief, relating to rulings of the superior court upon objections to evidence, but they all depend upon the propositions above discussed, and fall with them. At least, it may be said that none of the rulings complained of could have been substantially injurious to the defendants, even if some of them may have been technically erroneous. The order appealed from is affirmed.

SACRAMENTO COUNTY v. SOUTHERN
PAC. CO. et al. (Sac. 586.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1899.)

COUNTIES—CONTRACTS—ESTOPPEL.

1. A county agreed with a railroad company to pay it $30,000 to construct a public roadway on its railroad bridge, and $15,000 was paid when the work was commenced. The roadway was completed by the railroad in good faith, according to the terms of the contract, turned over to the county, and used by it. Held, in an action to recover the money paid on the ground that the contract was void because entered into without statutory authority, that the county, having permitted the railroad to construct the roadway in good faith, and accepted the benefits thereof, was estopped from recovering the money paid therefor.

2. County Government Act, § 8, providing that when any board of supervisors shall, without authority of law, pay out any money, the district attorney shall sue to recover the same, does not authorize a suit by the county to recover moneys paid under a void contract, which it is otherwise estopped to recover, where the other party to the contract has completed it in good faith, and the county has accepted the benefits thereof.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by the county of Sacramento against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial defendants appeal. Reversed.

A. L. Hart, for appellants. Frank D. Ryan and J. Charles Jones, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover $15,000, and 20 per cent. in addition thereto as damages, from the aforesaid defendants. Judgment was rendered for the amount claimed, and an appeal is now taken from that judgment and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

The facts, in substance, are these: The California Pacific Railroad Company contemplated building a railroad bridge across the Sacramento river at Sacramento city, connecting the counties of Sacramento and Yolo. The construction of this bridge would result in the demolition of the old railroad bridge between the two counties, which also was used by the public for travel in vehicles, on foot, etc., and would necessarily prevent travel from one county to the other. The board of supervisors of Sacramento county, hearing of the contemplated improvement, entered into negotiations with the California Pacific Railroad Company, whereby it was agreed that the county should pay to it $15,000 upon December —, 1893, and $15,000 upon the completion of the structure. In consideration of the aforesaid agreement upon the part of the county, said railroad company promised "to construct and maintain in connection with said new railroad bridge an overhead or separate roadway, to be maintained by the California Pacific Railroad Company for free public highway purposes, and to be independent of either tracks or trains." The company further agreed in consideration of the aid extended in the form of this $30,000, to prosecute the work with diligence, and finish the construction before December 31, 1895. It was also stipulated that, if the work was not completed by the aforesaid time, the company was to receive nothing from Sacramento county, and also refund the payment already made. At this stage of the proceedings the district attorney of plaintiff advised the board of supervisors that it had the power to enter into such a contract with defendants, and further advised the board that the respective action taken at that time by the county and the railroad company, in the form of written offers by the company and resolutions passed by the board, amounted in law to a legal, valid contract between the parties. Thereafter the first payment of $15,000 was made to the company, and the work of construction began. In October, 1895, the county of Sacramento, upon the claim that it had never entered into a valid, binding contract with defendants to pay the aforesaid $30,000, brought this action to recover the sum of $15,000 already paid, with 20 per cent. additional as damages in the form of a penalty, the basis of this claim being that the money was paid without authority of law, and could be recovered at the suit of the district attorney of the county. The contract is claimed to be void by reason of the fact that it was entered into contrary to the statutes, which call for plans and specifications, notices, bidding, etc., as conditions precedent to the building of a bridge by the county. The bridge was completed in December, 1895.

Among other defenses relied upon, an estoppel is set out, and upon this question of estoppel the court made the following finding of fact: "It is true that said overhead roadway upon said new bridge was fully constructed and opened to the public on the 16th day of December, 1895, and that ever since that time the same has been used by the inhabitants of Sacramento and Yolo counties for travel to and fro between said counties, with immunity from contact with their trains or tracks; and that said public has had the exclusive use of said overhead roadway without toll or charge; and that no railroad track has been laid thereon; and that said overhead roadway has been constructed and maintained in a good and substantial manner." This is, in substance, an action to recover money had and received, and this character of action is based upon the principle that one party has money which, in equity and good conscience, belongs to another. In the face of the facts quoted, we are at a loss to see how this money, in equity and good conscience, belongs to Sacramento county. If the plaintiff had lived up to its contract to the letter, and paid the entire sum of $30,000 to defendants, and if at some future time defendants had closed this overhead roadway, we can readily imagine that the county of Sacramento would have at once asked and obtained relief from the courts, any question of ultra vires contract or defective contract to the contrary. Certainly, under such circumstances, the county would be entitled to relief, for defendants would not be in a position to raise any question as to the invalidity of the contract under which the money was paid to it. With the money jingling in their pockets, they would be absolutely estopped, upon every principle of common justice, from casting a single speck upon the binding force of the contract which had been entered into with the county, and upon which it had received the money. The rule works equally well the other way, and we are satisfied that this plaintiff is estopped from securing a return of the money. There is no claim that the county was defrauded. There is no claim that the benefits accruing to the county were not equal to the expenditure made. In this transaction the county was the agent of the public, and by the transaction the public have secured an exclusive right of way over the bridge of defendants as long as that bridge remains. It may be said that the easement of right of way over the bridge, with the annexed covenant to keep in repair, is far more valuable than a perfect title to the bridge itself; for the public have all the benefits of the bridge without any of the burdens accompanying its ownership.

Many legal complications arise in the building of a bridge across a stream forming the boundary line between two counties. Neither county is able to deal with the question alone. It appears that the consent of both is required. It is extremely doubtful if the statutes bearing upon the course to be followed by boards of supervisors in building bridges within the county are applicable to the building of bridges over streams dividing two counties. Legislation upon the question is lacking, and, what little there is, most indefinite. Possibly in this case the law was not carried out. Possibly the defendants, aside from any question of estoppel or ratification, could not have recovered either installment of the $30,000 to be paid. But still the all-important fact remains that these parties entered into the contract in the utmost good faith. The advice of the law officer of the county was taken, and he advised that the contract was a lawful one, and was sufficiently evidenced. The work contracted for was done. The money was paid for the work. The party paying the money received full value for it, and still enjoys the benefits received from the contract. Under such circumstances a plain example of estoppel is before us, and by reason of that estoppel the plaintiff is forever barred from recovering the money involved in this litigation. If a party contract to erect a bridge, or a poor house, or a court house for a county at a reasonable price, and the structure erected, the contract price paid, and possession of the structure taken, we believe, in an action by the county for the return of the money, based upon the invalidity of the contract, no court would be found to declare that in equity and good conscience the money should be returned. And this, too, notwithstanding the widest departure from the statute may have been practiced in the making of the contract. The case at bar in principle differs but little from the illustration given.

There is nothing so sacred about a municipality that an estoppel may not be raised against it by its acts. In equity and good conscience, like individuals, it is bound to treat its neighbors fairly and justly. In City of Los Angeles v. Cohen, 101 Cal. 373, 35 Pac. 1002, this court, in order to do justice, held that the acts of the city were such as to estop the public from questioning the title of the defendants in that action to a strip of land claimed by the city to be a portion of a public street. The question of estoppel between a county and an individual involves no such grave difficulties. The doctrine of estoppel against municipalities is universally applied. In the early case of Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 266, this court said: "The doctrine of ratification and estoppel is as applicable to corporations as to individuals, and the former are bound by the acts of their agents in the same manner and to the same extent as the latter. There is no difference, in this respect, between public and private corporations; for in matters of contract a public corporation is regarded merely as a legal individual, and treated in all respects as a private person." It thus appears that there is no substantial difference in the application of the doctrine as between private and public corporations. Indeed, the whole history of estoppel, as involved in this case, is strongly and convincingly stated in Brown v. City of Atchison, 39 Kan. 33, 17 Pac. 465, in the following language: "Where a contract is entered into in good faith between a corporation, public or private, and an individual person, and the contract is void, in whole or in part, because of want of power on the part of the corporation to make it, or enter into it in the manner in which the corporation enters into it, but the contract is not immoral, inequitable, or unjust, and the contract is performed in whole or in part by and on the part of one of the parties, and the other party receives benefits by reason of such performance over and above any equivalent rendered in return, and these benefits are such as one party may lawfully render and the other party lawfully receive, the party receiving such benefits will be required to do equity towards the other party by either rescinding the contract and placing the other party in statu quo, or by accounting to the other party for all of the benefits received for which no equivalent has been rendered in return; and all this should be done as nearly in accordance with the terms of the contract as the law and equity will permit." In the case of Commissioners v. Aspinwall, 21 How. 544, 16 L. Ed. 208, it is said: "Citation of authorities to this point is unnecessary, as the whole subject has been recently examined by this court, and the rule clearly laid down that a corporation, quite as much as an individual, is held to a careful adherence to truth in their dealings with other parties, and cannot, by their representations or silence, involve others in onerous engagements, and then defeat the calculations and claims their own conduct has superinduced." From these authorities, and many others which can be cited, it is apparent that public corporations, like individuals, are bound to act in good faith, and deal justly; that they cannot be allowed to enter into contracts involving others in expensive engagements, silently permit these contracts to be executed, and then repudiate them because the statutory steps have not been pursued in the letting of the contracts.

This action is largely based upon authority claimed to be found in section 8 of the county government act, wherein it is provided: "Hereafter, whenever any board of supervisors shall without authority of law order any money paid as a salary, fees, or for other purpose, and such money shall have been actually paid, * * * the district attorney of such county is hereby empowered, and it is hereby made his duty, to institute suit in the name of the county against such person or persons to recover the money so paid, and twenty per cent. damages for the use thereof." This statute was never intended to have the effect, and cannot now be construed as having the effect, of nullifying the principle of law we have been considering, known as an "equitable estoppel." Money paid "without authority of law" means money paid out by the board of supervisors upon claims based upon a subject-matter not within the scope of the powers of the board. In other words, it is the application of the moneys of the county to a purpose not within the general powers of the board. But the power of a board of supervisors to construct bridges, to build and lay out roads, to secure easements in the form of rights of way for public travel, are matters within the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors. Again, by subdivision 8 of section 25 of the county government act the board has the power to purchase or lease real or personal property necessary for the use of the county. The county could buy a bridge or lease a bridge. As already suggested, in substance this transaction was a purchase of this overhead roadway. The county is the owner of everything pertaining to the bridge that is valuable, with the single exception of the old lumber and iron when decay overtakes it. If a county may buy a bridge, or rent a bridge, it may purchase the exclusive right of way over a bridge. We need not split hairs in giving a technical name to the interest which the county has in the bridge, but it is apparent to every one that it has a substantial interest therein, and, in the absence of some claim or showing to the contrary, we may assume that such interest is full value for the money expended. We are not now passing on the validity of the contract entered into between the parties to this litigation. It is not material here. We are not intimating but that at the instance of a taxpayer in the early history of these negotiations the entire transaction may not have been judicially killed. All that we have said bears upon the single question of estoppel, and is said in view of the conclusion arrived at by the court that an equitable estoppel against plaintiff should be held in this case. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

In re SILVANY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 802.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1899.)
WILLS—CONTEST—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

The principal devisee under a will had persistently urged the testator to make the will, and took him to the home of the devisee's mistress, against the protests of testator's physician and nurse, when he was dangerously ill. Testator had resisted previous importunities of such devisee to make a will in his favor, and had once expressed a wish to be taken away, saying that they were robbing him. The devisee accused the testator of ingratitude, and, though such devisee could not speak English, he testified that the dying testator executed and published the will exactly as required by law. The only persons present were the beneficiaries, devisee's mistress, and the executor, a saloon keeper, whom the testator exempted from giving bond, and who otherwise could not have qualified. The will was drawn by a lawyer at devisee's instance, who did not consult the testator, but submitted the will to the devisee after preparing it. Held, that a verdict finding that the will was the result of undue influence was not against the weight of the evidence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Contest of the will of Stephan Silvany, deceased. The will was admitted to probate on petition of Francisco Quijada, after which petitioners instituted proceedings to set the same aside. From a judgment in favor of petitioners, Quijada appeals. Affirmed.

Z. Montgomery and J. W. McDonald, for appellant. W. A. Harris, Harris & Garrett, and Augustus Montañó, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. Stephan Silvany died January 10, 1898, and on the 28th of January, 1898, the superior court of Los Angeles county admitted to probate what purported to be his last will, being dated January 8, 1898. It was probated upon the petition of Francisco Quijada. The petitioner and his illegitimate son, Jesus Quijada, were the sole beneficiaries under the will, and one L. O. Flores was named therein as the executor. Within one year thereafter, but precisely when does not appear, certain parties inaugurated a contest in the superior court by filing a petition alleging that the decedent left a will dated March 6, 1891, in which certain of the petitioners were named as executors. In that will all the property of the testator, except $500, was left to Francis Mora in trust for the erection and maintenance at Los Angeles of a Catholic female orphan asylum. In that petition the probate of the other will was averred, but it was charged that it was in fact never published or executed by Silvany, but was fraudulently concocted in pursuance and furtherance of a scheme to defraud the estate of Silvany out of all the property owned by Silvany. It was also charged that at the time of the alleged making and publishing of said will of 1898 the testator was of unsound mind, and subject to undue influence from said Francisco Quijada. An answer was interposed to the petition, and a contest had. The due execution of the will of 1891 was not really disputed. As to the will of 1898 several special issues were submitted to the jury, to only one of which response was made. That was as follows: "Did the deceased, Stephan Silvany, subscribe the contested will himself? Ans. No." Upon this verdict the court made an order setting aside the probate of the will of 1898, and revoked the letters issued to Flores, and admitted to probate the will of 1891.

The appellant makes here but the single point that the evidence does not justify the verdict. The proposition is urged with great force and earnestness, and we have carefully read and considered the evidence in connection with the argument. We cannot say that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the verdict. It is not a case where admittedly a will was made, which the alleged testator intended to make, but which it is charged he was induced to make through fraud or undue influence. The verdict is to the effect that Silvany did not make the will at all. It must also be borne in mind that it is within the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses. The jury doubtless believed the testimony of Juan B. Sanchez and Gonzales, notwithstanding the assaults made upon their credibility, and disbelieved the counter statements of Quijada and others. This court will not ordinarily review the conclusion of the jury upon that subject. Upon that basis there certainly were reasons to doubt the honesty and fairness of Quijada and Flores in the matter. Quijada persistently and even indecently urged and insisted that Silvany should make a will in his favor. The sick man was taken, against the protests of his physician and nurse, to the home of the former mistress of Quijada, the mother of the only other beneficiary of the contested will, when he was so ill that the removal was imprudent and dangerous; but still Silvany resisted the importunities of Quijada to make a will in his favor. Quijada twice brought persons to the house for the purpose of preparing the will. Both times Silvany declined to make the will and once expressed a wish to be taken away from there, saying that they were robbing him, while Quijada accused Silvany of ingratitude for his refusal to make a will favorable to him. Silvany always said he had given his property to the orphans. And then there is Quijada's statement of how the will was prepared and executed; notwithstanding Silvany's persistent refusal to comply with his importunities. On January 7th, "about four o'clock, my compadre said that he was very sick, and he wanted to make a will." He also told Quijada that he would give certain land to his son Jesus, and the balance of his estate to Quijada, and asked if he liked Flores as administrator, to which Quijada assented, and then Silvany said, "We will put him as administrator and at the same time without bonds." They agreed upon that, and Quijada went to a lawyer and asked him to prepare the will. The lawyer said he would prepare it and meet him with it the next day at Flores' saloon. The next day the lawyer met him at Flores' saloon, and read it to Quijada, to see if it was as Silvany ordered, and said: "Here is Jesus Quijada with a house, and all the rest is for you. Here is also Flores, administrator." The next day Silvany, being very sick, sent for Flores and Quijada's son Severiano. Assembled at the house there were, besides Silvany, Francisco Quijada, his mistress, Flores, and Severiano. Then Silvany asked Flores to read the will, which he did in Spanish and English. Then Silvany said: "That's my will. You sign my name to it." Then Flores wrote something, and took the paper and a pen to Silvany, who took the tip of the pen, and a cross was made. Then "my compadre told Mr. Flores to write his name as a witness to the will," which was done. "Then my compadre called Severiano, * * * and told him that was his will, and to write his name as a witness to it," which was done. "My compadre told Mr. Flores to hand the paper to me, which he did, and my compadre told me to take care of it; that that was his will." The dying Silvany, uninstructed and without prompting, went through the entire ceremony of the execution and publication of the will just as a lawyer, if present, would have directed, not only omitting no requisite, but everything is done in due order; and it was no small feat for the witness, who has long resided at Los Angeles, but cannot speak English, to recite it so completely and in order. And it was thoughtful on the part of Silvany, who, according to the witness, had consulted no one in regard to the will, of his own motion to suggest that no bond be required of Flores. Otherwise, Flores would not have been able to qualify. But, while we can but wonder that all these things were so well done by those from whom we should least have expected it, we are unable to compliment the attorney who drew the will in the same way. He received his instructions as to writing the will solely from one who was practically to get the entire estate under the will. It does not seem to have occurred to him that it would be a proper thing for him to see the proposed testator, to make sure that he wanted to make a will at all, or such a will. And after the will was prepared he did not think it necessary that he should read and explain it to the testator, to satisfy himself that it expressed the real wish of the testator. This was quite out of the ordinary course. But the attorney by appointment went to a saloon, kept by the person who was named as executor without bonds, to read it to the devisee to whom practically the whole estate was left by the will, to learn from him whether it was such a will as the testator wished. For all this, the will may have been an honest will, but if it had been designed to force its execution upon Silvany, or to forge a will, the course taken was the precise course which might have been adopted. If Silvany was alive, and desired to make the disposition of his property, it is strange that the attorney did not ask permission to see him, and was not asked to attend to the execution of the will. There are other circumstances as much relied upon by the contestants, but these considerations are sufficient to show that the verdict cannot be set aside for lack of evidence. The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BLACKMAN. (Cr. 531.)

CRIMINAL LAW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—DETERMINATION—TRIAL—PRESENCE OF JUDGE—EMBEZZLEMENT—EVIDENCE—ACCOUNT BOOKS.

1. A motion for a new trial in a prosecution for felony, based on the judge's absence from the court room, must be determined on the affidavits filed, and not on his belief as to the length of time he was absent.

2. On a trial for felony the conduct of the trial judge in going from the court room into his chamber, closing the door, and remaining there about 10 minutes, while the state's attorney was arguing the case to the jury, was prejudicial error, although he could hear the argument.

3. The fact that it was defendant's duty, as secretary of a corporation, to know the contents of its books, which had been falsified while in his custody, to enable him to commit the crime of embezzlement or conceal it, did not make them admissible against him to show receipt of the money, and that he falsified them, without first showing that he was responsible for their condition.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

W. R. Blackman, convicted of a felony, appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Shinn, F. G. Finlayson, and Earl Rogers, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was convicted of a felony. Upon the hearing of the motion of defendant for a new trial two affidavits were read in its support, made by two different persons, who were present at the trial. In substance, they deposed that, after the court had instructed the jury, and while the district attorney was addressing the jury, the presiding judge left the bench and the court room, and went into another room, closed the door behind him, and was absent from the court room about 10 minutes, during which time the district attorney proceeded with his argument to the jury upon the facts of the case. No affidavit disputing these facts or explaining the absence of the judge was made by any one. Defendant's affidavits were filed with the notice of motion for a new trial, and when the motion came on to be heard, and the affidavits were read, the court made the following remark: "What! What! The court knows of its own knowledge that it was not absent any such time, or in any such manner, and was not out of hearing of counsel while arguing said cause at any time, and that the door of my chamber was open at that time, and even when the door is shut I can hear all that is going on in the court room." The attorney general cites Southern California Motor-Road Co. v. San Bernardino Nat. Bank, 100 Cal. 316, 34 Pac. 711, in which the court quotes from a Nevada case "that in all motions before a judge during the progress of the trial he may act on his own knowledge in regard to things which, in their nature, are better known to himself than they could be to others." The motion in both these cases was for transfer of the place of trial upon the ground that the judge was interested in the cause, and in the case in 100 Cal. 316, 34 Pac. 711, the affidavit was not to the fact that the judge was disqualified by reason of interest (giving the disqualifying facts), but it was that, as affiant was informed and believed, the judge had said he considered himself disqualified. It has been held here recently that a motion to transfer a cause on the ground of the bias of the judge must be decided on affidavits (People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 Pac. 44), so that the above rule does not apply in that kind of a case; nor do we think it would apply where the facts as shown clearly disqualify the judge as interested in the cause of action. The judge's belief cannot overcome the legal conclusion to be drawn from the facts. The attorney general also claims that the statement of the judge from the bench must be received as a refutation of the facts set forth in the affidavits. We are not called upon to decide whether the statement of the court is to be received as the equivalent of an affidavit in all cases, or whether the rule in the case of People v. Compton, supra, applies, as is claimed by defendant. The facts stated in the affidavits were not, in their nature, better known to the judge than to others in the court room,—the sheriff, the clerk, counsel, and bystanders. If the statements were untrue, the fact could have been easily so shown by affidavit. But the statement of the judge, treated as an affidavit, and given its full effect as such, does not controvert the affidavits presented with the motion in all their essential facts. In People v. Tupper, 122 Cal. 424, 55 Pac. 125, the court said: "The judge is a component part of the court. There can be no court without the judge. And all that was done in the absence of the judge was done in the absence of the court. A defendant convicted under such circumstances has been deprived of his liberty without due process of law." In State v. Beuerman (Kan. Sup.) 53 Pac. 874, cited in the above case, it was said: "He [the judge] cannot even temporarily relinquish control of the court or the conduct of the trial. * * * It is especially important that he should be visibly present every moment of the actual progress of a criminal trial, where the highest penalty of the law may be imposed. * * * If the presiding judge abandons the trial, or relinquishes control over the proceedings, the accused has good cause to complain,"—citing numerous cases. Admitting all the judge said to be true, there is not in the statement sufficient to disprove the fact. Indeed, it inferentially concedes that he relinquished control of the case for the time. Something more is required of the presiding judge than that he should be within hearing. That might be true if he were on the street, and the windows of the court room open; and it may be true in this case, as the judge stated, that when in the adjoining room, with the doors shut, he "can hear all that is going on in the court room," but it must be obvious that he would be in no position to have control of the proceedings, and certainly would not be presiding in the cause when in an adjoining room, with the door open or shut. If any misconduct took place in the court room during such absence, there would be no judge present to whom defendant's counsel could make complaint, or to determine what occurred in his absence. Upon the authority of People v. Tupper we must hold the conduct of the judge to be prejudicial error.

Objections were made to the introduction of the books of the corporation,—that the evidence was mere hearsay, and was incompetent; that it was not made to appear that the defendant had ever seen or knew of the entries offered, and the evidence was incompetent to establish any fact against him. A great many entries made in a great many books were offered and received, over the objection of defendant. It appeared that some of the entries were in the handwriting of defendant, and others were not. They were introduced, not only to show the receipt of money by the defendant, but also to show forced balances, and thereby to raise the presumption of guilt. The bookkeeper was not sworn as a witness, but they were merely shown to be books kept by the company. Bolton, the bookkeeper, at about the time the shortage was discovered, had committed suicide. The position of the learned judge of the trial court was stated by him: "This is one of the books of the company. He is charged by the by-laws and the custom of the company with the keeping of the books. This book was presumably in his custody, and under his control. I don't care who kept it. If there is anything wrong about it, that is for the defense." As a matter of course, this view is not insisted upon here. The presumption of innocence would overcome all the presumptions of knowledge and control, if they existed; and it was for the prosecution to show that the defendant was responsible for the condition of the books, and in a criminal proceeding it is not enough that it was his duty to know of their contents, and that in a civil action they would be competent evidence against him on that ground. He cannot be held for the crime of embezzlement because he has negligently performed his duty as secretary of the corporation, but such consequence might result under the rulings of the court. Most of the books were in the handwriting of Bolton. It was not shown that defendant examined them to see that they were correct, or, save by the presumption mentioned, that he knew anything about them. Books kept by the collectors were also introduced, without any evidence as to their correctness, and that defendant ever saw them; and the same is true as to the books of the bank showing what deposits were made. The books were certainly not admissible as shop books. The receipt of such books in evidence is an exception to the general rule, and they are admitted for a limited purpose only. This case is clearly not within the exception. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 120b. Aside from shop books, kept by one of the parties to an action, "regular entries made in the course of business" are sometimes received. Id. § 120. Such entries must be made in pursuance of some system which is a part of the business, should be nearly contemporaneous with the event, and made by one who knew the fact, and had no interest in making a false entry. In short, the motive for making the entries must be solely to record the truth, and not to misrepresent. The illustrations given by Greenleaf are entries made by "one sending orders or bills, by a notary sending protests, a cashier sending notices of nonpayment, a marine inspector certifying to a vessel's condition, an attorney keeping a book of proceedings, an asylum officer keeping a weather record, records of baptism or marriage by priest or minister." In all these cases the record was made only because it was deemed important to preserve in perpetual memory what actually occurred. There was no inducement to make a false record, but, on the contrary, false entries in most of the cases would be misleading and injurious. It must be kept in view that, after all, such evidence is hearsay, and secondary, and is receivable only when better evidence cannot be had, and in the special cases which come within the rule. Being entries made in due course of business does not make them primary evidence. There is much plausibility in the contention that they are admissible, as against an employé, to show what amount of money was received by the corporation, and when it was received; provided, of course, there is nothing which tends to impeach the record as truthful. In this case, one purpose for which the books were offered was to show that defendant did not keep correct books, but that they were falsified for the purpose of enabling the defendant to perpetrate the crime, or for the purpose of concealment. Under such circumstances they cannot be received as regular entries made in the course of business. The presumption of correctness is destroyed, and they are not offered as proof of the facts recited. If there was evidence that the entries were made by the defendant, or under his direction, or with his knowledge, they would most undoubtedly be competent and important evidence against him. They are clearly inadmissible, except as admissions, or as acts done in furtherance of the crime charged against him. His knowledge and complicity in falsifying the books must first be shown. The presumption of innocence with which the law clothes the defendant is sufficient to overcome the presumption which might prevail in a civil case that he knew because it was his duty to know. As before stated, he is not to be punished criminally for negligently performing his duty. As a new trial must be had on other grounds, it is not necessary to discuss this matter further. The books kept by the collectors and the bank books should have been offered in connection with the evidence of those who kept them. As primary evidence could have been had in these cases, there was no excuse for offering secondary evidence. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GOODALL et al. v. JACK. (L. A. 592.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1899.)

BILLS AND NOTES—RENEWAL—CORPORATIONS—STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—LIMITATIONS.

A corporation authorized the issuance of new notes on surrender of notes held by plaintiffs, or on receipt of their value from any other person; directed new notes to be made to him, and the proceeds applied to plaintiffs' claim. Plaintiffs presented K.'s check for the amount and the notes, and new notes were executed to K., who immediately indorsed them to plaintiffs. The corporation indorsed K.'s check to plaintiffs, who deposited it in a bank to their credit. At the time the check was drawn, K. did not have sufficient funds in his bank to meet it, and on the following day gave the bank his note for the amount of the check, which he paid on the next day by a check from plaintiffs. The entire transaction was between plaintiffs and the corporation, which knew nothing of K. except that the check was signed by, and the notes made payable to, him. Held, that such facts constituted a renewal of the old notes merely, and not the creation of a new debt, and hence plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain an action to enforce a stockholder's liability on the new notes more than seven years after the giving of the original notes.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by Charles Goodall and others, co-partners, against R. E. Jack. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Towle, Jr., and Wilcoxon & Bouldin, for appellants. W. H. Spencer, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, Jack, was, during the times mentioned in the complaint, a stockholder of a corporation called the West Coast Land Company, and this action is brought to recover the proportionate share of defendant as such stockholder of a debt of the corporation alleged to have been incurred to one J. N. Knowles for money borrowed from him by the corporation on the 15th day of May, 1894. In his answer the defendant pleads, among other things, that the alleged cause of action is barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 338 and section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment went in the court below for the defendant, and plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The court found, among other things, that the alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of the Code above mentioned, and the only point discussed by counsel is whether or not that finding was correct. It appears from the evidence that in May, 1890, the corporation above mentioned incurred an indebtedness to the plaintiffs herein of a sum of money amounting to nearly $200,000, for which it gave to the plaintiffs four promissory notes for different sums, amounting in the aggregate to said sum of about $200,000. Four years afterwards—on or about the 15th day of May, 1894—the board of directors passed a resolution authorizing the president and secretary to make notes of the corporation, payable to plaintiffs in the amount of the old notes, with interest, upon the surrender of the old notes, or, upon the receipt of the face value of the new notes from "any other person," then to make the new notes to such other person, and "to immediately apply all sums so received from said new notes in payment of said old notes." The old notes, with interest, then amounted to $219,213.62. On said 15th day of May, 1894, one of the plaintiffs brought to the secretary of the corporation a check of J. N. Knowles upon the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, for the said sum of $219,213.62, and the plaintiff delivered up to the secretary all the old notes to be canceled. The check of Knowles was immediately indorsed by the secretary to plaintiffs, and notes for the said amount were made payable to Knowles, which notes were on the same day indorsed by Knowles to the plaintiffs, and the check of Knowles was deposited by plaintiffs to their credit with the First National Bank of San Francisco. Knowles seems to have had good financial standing with the Anglo-Californian Bank, although when he drew the check on the 15th there was a balance due him on his account with the bank of only about $1,200. But on the next day—the 16th—he gave to the bank his note for the amount of the check, and the amount of his note was placed to his credit. On the next day he received a check from plaintiffs for $219,286.69, and took up his note by checking against his account. In the whole transaction the negotiations were between the plaintiffs and the corporation, and the latter knew nothing of Knowles in the business except only that the check was signed by him and the new notes were made payable to him. From the foregoing facts it is apparent that the court was warranted in finding that the transactions above mentioned constituted merely a renewal of the old debt by taking up the old notes and giving new ones in lieu thereof. But the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the stockholders could not, in this way, be interrupted. The suit was not brought until seven years after the time when the original liability was created. Code Civ. Proc. § 359; Bank of San Luis Obispo v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 103 Cal. 594, 37 Pac. 499; Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 63, 27 Pac. 40; Wagon Co. v. Bull, 108 Cal. 1, 40 Pac. 1077. These views make it unnecessary to discuss other questions,—as, for instance, what the respondent's rights would have been if Knowles had really advanced the money to the corporation upon the credit of its notes to him, and the money thus advanced had been actually used by the corporation to pay off the old notes which were evidences of the original liability created in 1890. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GARCIA. (Cr. 561.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1899.)

GRAND LARCENY—INFORMATION—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR—WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

1. A demurrer to an information on the ground that it was indefinite was properly overruled, as that is not one of the grounds for demurrer enumerated by Pen. Code, § 1004.

2. As Pen. Code, § 487, declares that grand larceny is committed when the value of the property taken exceeds $50, an information is within the statute, whether it alleges that the stealing of property of such value was from the person or not.

3. Where the evidence tended to show that an alleged larceny took place in a certain room, evidence that defendant lived therein was admissible, though it appeared that a woman jointly accused with him of the same offense lived in the same room, and the circumstance was possibly unfortunate to defendant, with the jury.

4. The cross-examination of witnesses who testified to defendant's general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity may take a wide scope.

5. The evidence in a prosecution for larceny of money tended to show that the money was taken from an intoxicated person, to whom defendant afterwards introduced a hack driver as his coachman, and directed the driver where to go and throw him out. Held that, if it was error to admit evidence of what was thereafter done by the driver and defendant's victim in his absence, it was entirely harmless.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

T. N. Garcia was convicted of larceny, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

H. H. Appel and Davis & Morrison, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. By the information in this case T. N. Garcia and two females—Susie Douglass and Rosa Durbin—were jointly accused of grand larceny committed in the stealing, etc., from "the ownership and possession of Thomas Tomlinson," certain money of the value of $295, the property of said Tomlinson. Garcia was tried separately. He was convicted of the offense charged, and has appealed.

Appellant demurred to the information on the alleged ground that the same "is indefinite, in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether said larceny is from the person or not." The demurrer was rightly overruled. Indefiniteness of the information is not a ground for demurrer thereto. Pen. Code, § 1004; People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 Pac. 620. Moreover, although the language of the information varied somewhat from the usual formula, yet, since it was alleged that the property stolen was above the value of $50, the offense charged was within the statutory definition of grand larceny, whether the stealing was from the person or not. Pen. Code, § 487. So that the information can no more be called indefinite for failing to show whether the money was taken from the person of Tomlinson, than for failing to show whether it was taken from his house.

The chief insistence of appellant in this court seems to be that on the trial the court below allowed the district attorney to show ("in devious and improper ways," it is claimed) the existence of immoral relations between appellant and said Rosa Durbin. Many instances of evidence having this bearing and admitted by the court are specified as error in the brief of appellant. It would not be profitable to discuss them singly. There was evidence tending to prove the following facts, among others: Said Susie Douglass occupied room 47, and said Rosa Durbin occupied room 49, of a certain building in the city of Los Angeles. Tomlinson, a stranger in the city, visited them at said rooms on the evening when the alleged larceny occurred, having then in his possession paper currency to the amount stated in the information. Appellant, Garcia, was also present, and the party passed some hours in carousing together at Tomlinson's expense. Late in the evening Tomlinson had become grossly intoxicated, and all his money aforesaid was gone. Appellant then caused him to be taken away in a hack, instructing the driver, among other things, to keep silent, and to "take him somewhere and throw him away." Immediately afterwards appellant handed to said Rosa Durbin $80 in bills of like character and denominations with some of the said money of Tomlinson, and she secreted them. She testified that appellant took the same from Tomlinson, and there was evidence other than hers that by appellant's direction she paid the driver for "hauling" Tomlinson away. Under the circumstances detailed, the close associations existing between Rosa Durbin and defendant, Garcia, are quite apparent. The evidence tended to show that the larceny took place in the Russ House, and probably in room 49. The fact that defendant lived in that room was admissible evidence. And, if it also appeared that Rosa Durbin lived in the same room, such circumstance possibly was an unfortunate one for defendant in the eyes of the jury. At the same time, it is a circumstance of which defendant is not entitled to complain. We see nothing objectionable in the cross-examination of defendant's witnesses who took the stand and testified as to his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. The cross-examination of that class of witnesses may take a wide scope.

Appellant introduced the said driver to Tomlinson as his (appellant's) coachman, and directed the driver where to go and to throw Tomlinson out. The driver testified that he took him to the place indicated by appellant; that he opened the door of the carriage, and Tomlinson "crawled out." It is objected that this evidence, and some other of similar character, was improper, because the things done by Tomlinson and the driver were not in the presence of appellant. Conceding the rule of the court to be error, still it is apparent that the error was entirely harmless.

The other points made by appellant have, we are disposed to think, as little merit as the one last considered. It seems unnecessary to state them in detail, though we have attentively examined them all. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ESLABE. (Cr. 507.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1899.)

HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—DEPOSITION OF DECEASED WITNESS—REPORTER'S NOTES.

1. Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5, provides that the reporter's stenographic notes of depositions taken in cases of homicide must be filed with the county clerk. Held, in a prosecution for murder, not error to overrule an objection to the admission in evidence of the deposition of a witness, since deceased, taken at the preliminary examination, where it was not affirmatively shown that the reporter's notes had been filed with the county clerk.

2. Any irregularity in admitting in evidence in a prosecution for murder the deposition of a deceased witness taken at the preliminary examination, where it was not shown that the reporter's stenographic notes had been filed with the county clerk, as required by Pen. Code, § 869, subd. 5, was without injury to the defendant, where the notes were actually so filed before the conclusion of the trial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Joaquin Eslabe was convicted of murder in the first degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Frick and W. B. White, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant, convicted of murder in the first degree, appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

John Metz was a witness at the preliminary examination of the defendant. At the trial it was shown that he was dead. His deposition taken at the preliminary examination, and contained in the transcript of the notes of the official reporter at that hearing, was offered in evidence. Objection to its introduction was made upon the ground that it had not affirmatively been shown that the stenographic reporter had filed his original notes with the county clerk, as required by section 869, subd. 5, of the Penal Code. The objection was overruled, and the deposition admitted in evidence. There was no error in this ruling, and, if there was any irregularity, it was without injury to the defendant, in view of the fact that the notes were actually filed with the county clerk before the conclusion of the trial. In People v. Grundell, 75 Cal. 301, 17 Pac. 214, another provision of section 869 of the Penal Code, which requires that the transcript of the reporter's notes shall be filed with the clerk within 10 days, was held to be directory merely, and not mandatory. The provision here under consideration merely requires that the reporter shall file his original notes with the county clerk; and this, as has been said, was done before the conclusion of the trial.

The defendant made statements in the nature of confessions to several different persons who were witnesses at the trial. Objections were interposed to the reception as evidence of these statements, upon the ground that it was not shown that they were freely and voluntarily made. The objection, however, finds no support in the record, which discloses that in each instance before the admission in evidence of the defendant's declarations it was proved that they were freely and voluntarily given, and made neither under duress nor inducement nor promise. These being the only matters called to our attention upon this appeal, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HANLEY v. CALIFORNIA BRIDGE & CONSTRUCTION CO. (S. F. 1,137.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1899.)

MOTION FOR NONSUIT—MASTER AND SERVANT—PERSONAL INJURY—TUNNEL WORKMEN—REQUIREMENTS FOR SAFETY—NOTICE—PRESUMPTION—APPLIANCES—EVIDENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

1. A motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every legitimate inference of fact which may be drawn therefrom, and on such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against defendant.

2. A superintendent engaged to supervise the construction of a tunnel, and who visited the work once or twice a day, must be presumed to know as much as his workmen as to the general requirements to make the place reasonably safe from the fall of overhanging rock.

3. Where a permanent tunnel is under construction, as fast as completed the finished part becomes an appliance or means furnished by the master by which the remaining work is to be prosecuted.

4. There was evidence that a tunnel had been driven in about 18 feet, and that it was about 8 feet wide and from 9 to 10 feet high; that a rock which fell and injured a workman was about 10 feet from the mouth; that the tunnel had passed the place where the rock was three or four days. Held, in an action for the injury, that on a motion for nonsuit this would be assumed to show that the tunnel was completed at the point in question, so that it was his employer's duty to see that it was reasonably safe, though there was some unexplained evidence that the side of the tunnel opposite this point had been blasted, which might possibly imply that it was not entirely completed there.

5. As plaintiff was removing, with a wheelbarrow, rock from a tunnel as it was being constructed, he was injured by an overhanging rock, which fell from a finished portion thereof, unsupported by timbers. He was inexperienced in running tunnels, and had no means of knowing that the tunnel was unsafe. He saw the rock, but it did not appear to be loose, and was beyond reach high above his head. His fellow servants were skilled miners, but gave him no warning. Neither did the superintendent, who visited the work daily. It appeared, however, that the tunnel, to be safe, required some timbering, but these had not been inserted. Held, that plaintiff's negligence in exposing himself to the danger was for the jury.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Philip Hanley against the California Bridge & Construction Company, a corporation. From a judgment of nonsuit and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Henley & Costello, for appellant. Davis & Hill, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover damages for personal injury while working in a tunnel. The pleadings are verified. The cause was tried by a jury, and at the close of plaintiff's evidence the court granted defendant's motion for judgment of nonsuit. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying motion for new trial.

Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show the following facts: Defendant was engaged in the construction of a tunnel at Baker's Beach, in San Francisco, and plaintiff was employed by defendant as a laborer, his duty being to load and haul away rock and débris from this tunnel with a wheelbarrow. He was inexperienced in running tunnels, and was working with experienced miners, who were skilled, and had had long experience in such work. He had been working 6½ days when the accident happened by which he was injured. The tunnel ran into the face of a receding rock bluff which rose up from the ocean beach. As driven in at that time, it measured about 18 feet at the bottom and about 15 feet at the top, and was 8 feet wide and 9 or 10 feet high. Defendant had a superintendent, who was in charge of the work, and employed the men, and who visited the tunnel once or twice a day, but gave no instructions to the men concerning the work, except generally for them to go on with the tunnel; and he never gave any instructions to the plaintiff, except that when he employed plaintiff he directed him to wheel out the stuff which was blasted down or loosened. On the day of the accident the plaintiff, having laid some planks upon which to run his wheelbarrow, was arranging these planks on the bottom of the tunnel, when a rock, weighing about 1,000 pounds, fell from the corner or angle where the roof and wall met, about 10 feet from the mouth and 8 feet from the back end of the tunnel, breaking plaintiff's leg, driving the bones out through the flesh, and seriously injuring him. The rock fell quickly, without giving opportunity to escape, and plaintiff heard no noise before it fell. The tunnel had passed this place three or four days before the rock fell. The rock which fell differed from the others "in that it had a kind of diamond shaped point projecting into the tunnel," and was in size about 2 by 2½ feet. Before it fell, "plaintiff did not notice any definite boundaries around it, nor whether the edge of the rock could be seen; that he had noticed this rock hanging there for three or four days before it fell." Timon, one of the miners helping to drive the tunnel,—a witness for plaintiff,—testified: "That the bluff into which the tunnel was being driven was seamy rock. That he thought the tunnel should have been timbered three or four days before, to prevent the falling of rock, and make it reasonably safe.

* * * That for three or four days he (Timon) had thought that rock dangerous [referring to the rock which did the injury], but that there was no visible cleavage or breaking around the rock." He "didn't tell plaintiff it was dangerous, or say anything to him about it, because he didn't think it his business to speak about it." He spoke to the other two men about it, and they paid no attention to it. The rock could not be seen from the surface, but only inside. A small stream of water ran down the face of the bluff over the tunnel, and the wall of the tunnel where this rock was located was damp, and he thought this water seeping through would loosen the rock, "and let it fall sooner than it otherwise would, on account of its not being timbered." The other two miners "were trying to let the rock hang until they had got another center. They left it, thinking perhaps it would stay there. That the way to have made the tunnel reasonably safe for the men working in it would have been to have timbered it." He was asked if there were not timbers there for this tunnel. He answered: "There was none before the rock fell. There were no timbers there before the rock fell. They were on the ground, I guess, but we did not have them in the tunnel." Being again asked, he answered: "No timbers were there until the rock fell; not that I saw; not for the tunnel. There were timbers there for the sewer, but they had no timbers in the tunnel until the rock fell upon the man." He further testified that they had, a half an hour before the accident, fired some blasts, and he was picking down the loose rock from the blasts when the rock fell, and plaintiff stood near him. Their custom was to light the fuse to fire the blasts, and go out to await the explosion, and then return quickly, and "by using the pick, and striking the walls and listening, would discover where rock had been loosened, and was liable to fall, and pick that down, in order to avoid the danger of falling rock." This was done just before the accident. A blast had been put in in the front of the tunnel and one opposite this rock at the top of the tunnel, and one opposite, near the bottom. After the explosion, witness went into the tunnel, and "was picking down the loose rock. The plaintiff went about adjusting the planks on which to run the wheelbarrow." At this time it was "the rock fell, and without noise, and plaintiff received his injuries." Sheridan, a witness for plaintiff, testified: That he had been engaged 30 years in constructing tunnels, and had gone out to look at this ground with a view to bidding on the contract. "Q. And from your observation of it, and your experience as a miner, I will ask you whether it is ground of such character as, to insure reasonable safety in tunneling, would or would not require timbering. A. That would depend altogether upon the size of the excavation. Q. Suppose the excavation was a tunnel of about ten feet wide and ten feet high? A. In that character of rock, I should judge that it would require some timbering." He further testified that many tunnels are run without timbering, depending upon the hardness of the rock and the course of the cleavage and circumstances of the case; that it is not customary in small tunnels to timber, depending upon circumstances; that a practical miner understands all these matters, and, if he wants to work in a dangerous place, it is his own risk; "but he should insist upon having it timbered where the character of the rock is dangerous,—where it is seamy;" that the timbering is generally done by the miners, but not always; that experienced miners are often deceived, "and something falls in where they have thought the tunnel safe," and "often where it looks as if the walls of the tunnel might fall in it does not fall, but remains."

1. Respondent devotes some attention to the evidence of the witness Timon to show that it is susceptible of a different meaning than that given it by appellant, and otherwise comments upon the weight of certain evidence. For example, that the result of Timon's testimony was that timbers were at the tunnel, ready to be used for timbering, and not, as claimed by appellant, that there were no timbers there except for the sewer. The motion for nonsuit admits the truth of plaintiff's evidence, and every inference of fact that can be legitimately drawn therefrom, and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against defendant. Goldstone v. Cold-Storage Co. (Cal.) 56 Pac. 776. This rule must be applied to all the evidence submitted by plaintiff.

2. The contention of respondent may be summarized as follows: That the three experienced employes and plaintiff were fellow servants, and this fact was for the court to determine; that the injury resulted from the negligence of these men, and, if the duty of removing the dangerous rock rested more directly upon the skilled and experienced workmen, still the rule applies to all fellow servants, though working in different capacities, and the employer is not liable to one who is injured by the negligence of another; that, though it be the duty of the employer to furnish the employe a safe place in which to work, in the present case the rule has no application, because the employer did not furnish the place, but plaintiff and the other three furnished the place by making the tunnel (citing Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017); that the nature of the work to be done by plaintiff and the condition of the tunnel were visible facts, and the dangers of the employment known to him, and he assumed the risks (citing Vaughn v. Railway Co., 83 Cal. 18, 23 Pac. 215, and other cases); and, finally, that the facts show contributory negligence. The complaint charges "that said defendant, in violation of its duty to furnish this plaintiff with a safe place to work, negligently and carelessly failed to properly or at all brace or timber said tunnel." This allegation is not denied. The evidence tends to show that the materials through which the tunnel was being driven were of a character requiring it to be timbered to be reasonably safe. The superintendent having charge of the work visited the tunnel once or twice a day, and must be presumed to have known as much as his workmen with regard to the general requirements to make the place reasonably safe from a danger such as befell plaintiff, even though it does not appear that he had actual knowledge of this particular overhanging rock; and it was his duty to ascertain the condition of the tunnel as to its safety. Among the requirements necessary to the safety of the workmen, as the evidence tends to show, were timbers to be placed in the tunnel; and the evidence also tends to show that none were supplied for this purpose, although there were timbers for the sewer. I cannot agree with respondent's counsel that the rule of law which requires the master to furnish a safe place in which his servants may work does not apply to this case as it presents itself. What further evidence might disclose is not now to be considered. In Callan v. Bull, relied upon by respondent, the facts presented a different case from this. There the workmen were engaged in constructing a jetty. To do this, certain temporary structures were necessary, and it was through the defects in one of these that the injury occurred. In speaking of the rule we are now considering the court said: "Manifestly, the place at which the work was to be done was not provided by the defendant, nor can it be said that different portions of the work in which the laborers might be engaged as it progressed was the 'place' furnished by their employer, within the meaning of the above rule, or that the bent or trestle, from which was suspended the mat on which the plaintiff was at work at the time of his injury, was one of the appliances to be furnished by the defendant." The soundness of these views need not be and are not questioned. Elsewhere in the opinion it was said that the rule "has no application when the place at which the work is to be done, or the appliances for doing the same, are to be prepared by the servant himself. If the appliance is furnished by the master for the purpose of enabling the servants to perform the work in which they are to be engaged, he is required to see that it shall be reasonably safe for that purpose; but, if the preparation of that appliance is a part of the work which the servant is required to perform, the master is not liable for any defect in its preparation." Among the cases cited in support of the opinion is Mining Co. v. Clay's Adm'r, 51 Ohio St. 542, 38 N. E. 610, where certain laborers in a coal mine were injured by the falling in of the roof by reason of its not being sufficiently propped, and the court held that "the place was not furnished as in any sense a permanent place of work, but was a place in which surrounding conditions were constantly changing, and, instead of being a place furnished by the master for the employés, within the spirit of the rule referred to, was a place the furnishing and preparation of which was in itself part of the work which they were employed to perform." What was said in Callan v. Bull and what we find in the Ohio case must be read in the light of the facts before the court. Where a permanent tunnel is driven into a mountain to open up veins of mineral, or pierces a mountain to furnish a permanent bed for a railroad, we think that, as fast as it is completed, the finished tunnel becomes an appliance or means furnished by the master by which the remaining work is to be prosecuted. Some of the great railroad tunnels of this century—for example, the Hoosac and Mont Cenis tunnels—required years for their completion from end to end. It would be most unreasonable to hold that the laborer employed upon the unfinished portion of one of these tunnels must take a fellow servant's risk in passing through miles of completed work to get to his place of employment. Nor can we see that the case would be different where he himself helped to complete the finished portion. The evidence before us is not entirely clear as to whether the tunnel in question was completed at the point where the accident occurred, so as to bring it within the reason of the rule we are discussing, but there was not sufficient evidence on the point to justify the court in holding that portion of the tunnel not to be completed in the sense we are considering a completed tunnel. The evidence is that the tunnel had been driven in about 18 feet, and that it was about 8 feet wide and from 9 to 10 feet high; that the rock that fell was in the top of the tunnel, and was about 10 feet from the mouth and 8 feet from the back end of the tunnel; that the tunnel had passed the place where the rock fell about three of four days. These expressions seem to imply a completed tunnel to the extent named; at least must be so taken on this motion. There is other evidence showing that for some reason, not fully nor intelligently explained, two blasts were put in the side of the tunnel opposite where the fatal rock was hanging. This might possibly imply that at that point the tunnel was not entirely completed. We do not think, however, that we are sufficiently enlightened by the evidence as now before the court to warrant us in saying that it takes the case out of the rule we are considering. We do not think that the court, on this motion, should assume, on such evidence as this, to say that the tunnel was not completed at the point in question, and that at that particular point the "place" was not such as it was the duty of the employer to furnish and to see that it was reasonably safe.

I think the view we have taken of the rule under consideration is fully supported in Railway Co. v. Jarvi, 3 C. C. A. 433, 53 Fed. 65, and in Kelley v. Mining Co. (Mont.) 41 Pac. 273. In the first of these cases Jarvi was a coal miner. He was injured by a rock falling upon him from the roof of one of the tunnels by which he had access to the place where his particular work called him. The case was heard before Caldwell and Sanborn, circuit judges, and Shiras, district judge. The opinion presents a careful review of the law upon the question here. The court said: "It is the duty of the employer to exercise ordinary care to provide a reasonably safe place in which his employé may perform his service. It is his duty to use diligence to keep this place in a reasonably safe condition, so that his servant may not be exposed to unnecessary and unreasonable risks. The care and diligence required of the master is such as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under like circumstances in order to protect his servants from injury. It must be commensurate with the character of the service required, and with the dangers that a reasonably prudent man would apprehend under the circumstances of each particular case. * * * For a failure to exercise this care, resulting in injury to the employé, the employer is liable; and this duty and liability extend, not only to the unreasonable and unnecessary risks that are known to the employer, but to such as a reasonably prudent man in the exercise of ordinary diligence—diligence proportionate to the occasion—would have known and apprehended." Further, as to the duty of the master and the rights of the servant, it was said: "The latter [the servant] has a right to presume, when directed to work in a particular place, that the master has performed his duty, and to proceed with his work in reliance upon this assumption, unless a reasonably prudent and intelligent man in the performance of his work as a miner would have learned facts from which he would have apprehended danger to himself." Upon the question of contributory negligence it was said: "The degrees of care required of the master and servant also differ, because defects in a piece of machinery or in the roof of a mine that to the eye of a competent inspector, such as the master employs, portend unnecessary and unreasonable risks and great danger, may have no significance to a laborer or miner who has had no experience in watching and caring for machinery or roofs of slopes in a mine; and the latter is not chargeable with contributory negligence simply because he sees or knows the defects, unless a reasonably intelligent and prudent man would, under like circumstances, have known or apprehended the risks which these defects indicate. The dangers and defects merely must have been so obvious and threatening that a reasonably prudent man would have avoided them, in order to charge the servant with contributory negligence." These principles are supported by numerous cases cited in the opinion, and seem to us a clear and sound exposition of the law. Applying these rules of law to the facts of this case, ought the court to have nonsuited the plaintiff? In actions like the present one, questions of negligence are for the jury to determine; and it is only when the facts are undisputed, and are such that reasonable men can fairly draw but one conclusion from them, that the question of negligence is ever considered one of law for the court. Railway Co. v. Jarvi, supra, and cases cited. We do not think the case, as it comes to us here, is one where all reasonable men must draw the inference that the plaintiff was guilty of, or the defendant free from, negligence. In Kelley v. Mining Co., supra, plaintiff was working in a mine, and was an experienced miner. His work was at the face of the tunnel which he was helping to run. He was injured by the falling of rock from the roof of the tunnel a short distance behind where he worked. The facts were not in all particulars as in this case, but they presented the question now before us, and it was decided that: "Where a miner is engaged in running a tunnel, drilling and blasting from its face, the employer is bound to furnish a safe place for work by using proper precautions to prevent the falling of the roof of that part of the tunnel already created, and by keeping the floor so free of debris as not to obstruct his escape in case of accident." (Syllabus.) Plaintiff had no knowledge of or experience in running tunnels. He neither knew, and, because he was inexperienced, had not the means of knowing, that the tunnel was unsafe without timbers. He saw this overhanging rock, but it presented to him no evidences of loosening, and no cleavage from around its edges was visible, and it was high above his head, and beyond his reach. His fellow servants were skilled in mining, and they gave him no warning, although at least one of them thought it liable to fall. The superintendent visited the mine daily, and he gave no warning and took no steps for the safety of plaintiff. A witness of long experience in running tunnels testified that, in his opinion, the tunnel would require some timbering, and in this opinion he was corroborated by the witness Timon. We cannot say that the facts were such that the court had the right to consider the question of negligence involved as one of law for the court.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the other points made by defendant, for, conceding that the men on the work were fellow servants, it was still the duty of defendant to furnish them a reasonably safe place in which to work. Whether the nature of the work to be done by plaintiff and the condition of the tunnel were visible facts, and the dangers of the employment were known to plaintiff, were questions of fact as to which there was at least some evidence which should have gone to the jury. The decision of the lower court seems to have turned on the proposition that the case was similar to Callan v. Bull, and was controlled by the rules applied in that case. But we think the circumstances attending the injury in this case clearly distinguishable from those found to exist in Callan v. Bull, and that the cases in 53 Fed. and 41 Pac., supra, more nearly illustrate the principles which should govern here. It is advised that the judgment and order should be reversed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent, and think that the judgment should be affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS et al. (Cr. 533.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1899.)

EXTORTION—THREATS—INDUCEMENTS—EVIDENCE—PRIOR OFFENSE—WITNESSES—EXAMINATION.

1. Under Pen. Code, § 518, declaring it extortion when property is obtained with the consent of the owner induced by an unlawful use of force or fear, the unlawful force or fear must be the controlling cause; and an instruction that, if the threat and fear formed any part of the inducement to the transfer of money, then its receipt constituted extortion, is erroneous.

2. In a prosecution for extortion, it was error to allow evidence of a conversation, held prior to the extortion charged, in which one of the defendants stated that he and the other defendant were making arrangements to blackmail persons other than the prosecuting witness, since such evidence was not connected with the crime charged, and was prejudicial to defendant.

3. Where a question asked a witness in a prosecution for extortion did not appear objectionable, but the answer let in inadmissible matter, after such answer it was not too late to move to strike it out.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Elsie Williams was convicted of extortion, and from the judgment she appeals. Reversed.

Frederick McGregor and Evans & Meredith, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant Elsie Williams and one Azhderian were jointly charged, tried, and convicted of the crime of extortion. The gist of the charge is that said defendants did extort from W. A. Nevilles $2,000 through fear upon his part induced by threats of defendants that they would publicly accuse him of adultery with defendant Williams.

The defendants asked the court to give the jury the following instruction: "If the money was given to Mrs. Williams by reason of love or affection, or by reason of the past relations existing between the said Mrs. Williams and the said Nevilles, or in settlement or compromise in whole or in part of a suit either begun or threatened, then I charge you that such payment is not extortion, and the defendants must be acquitted." This instruction was given as asked, but the following addition was made thereto by the court: "But, if the threat and fear mentioned in the indictment formed any part of the inducement to any such transfer of money, then the receipt of it would constitute the crime of extortion, and the person who received it, as well as any others who were concerned in the commission of such crime, * * * would be guilty of the crime charged." After the jurors had retired to deliberate upon their verdict they returned to the court for further information, whereupon the court, among other matters, stated to them as follows: "The fear that the threat would be carried out, if there was a threat, must have become a part, at least, of the reason for the payment of the money. It may be that there would be half a dozen reasons for a man to pay out money, which there would be no crime in receiving at all; but if a threat had been made, such as charged in the indictment, and fear that such threat would be carried out forms a part of the reason for the payment of the money, then the crime of extortion would be accomplished." The foregoing instructions do not correctly present the law of extortion. The conditions therein existing may have been disclosed by the evidence, and still the defendant be not guilty. Measured by these instructions, if the fear of the prosecuting witness induced by the threats of defendants entered to any extent whatever into the parting by him with his money, then the crime of extortion was committed. This cannot be a sound declaration of law. If the fear working upon the mind of the prosecuting witness by reason of these threats formed but the slightest part of the operating cause which induced Nevilles to part with his money, then no extortion was committed. If affection or sympathy upon the part of Nevilles for this defendant was the principal reason which induced him to part with his money, then there was no crime. In other words, our statute (section 518, Pen. Code) defining "extortion" says, "The crime is only committed when the property is obtained with the consent of the owner, and this consent must be induced by an unlawful use of force or fear." The statute can only mean that the unlawful use of force or fear must be the operating or controlling cause which produces the consent. If some other cause were the primary and controlling one in inducing the consent, then there would be no extortion. In another form we find this principle stated in People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. 567,—a case of obtaining property under false pretenses. It is there decided: "The position that the falsehood had a material effect upon the person defrauded in procuring the property necessarily implies that without it the object of the felon would have failed; he could not have obtained it. At least, we are disposed to require the false pretense or pretenses to be so material that, without the existence of their influence upon the mind of the person defrauded, he would not have parted with the property." Tested in the measure furnished by this decision, these instructions fail. The fear induced by the threat may have formed a part of the reason for the payment of the money, and yet the defendant be not guilty, for such a fear does not necessarily exclude the idea that the prosecuting witness would have parted with the money in the absence of the fear. This "part of the reason" must be so material that the money would not have been paid without it. And, when so material, it is the moving or operative cause which produces the consent to part with the money. It is plain that the instructions quoted fail to cover this ground. While the court repeatedly charged the jury correctly as to the various elements constituting the crime of extortion, these instructions in no degree neutralize the error committed in the giving of the instructions quoted. It is impossible for this court to say that the verdict of the jury was based upon the sound rather than the unsound. In view of the somewhat peculiar facts of this case, it was all-important that the instructions to the jury bearing upon the reasons which induced the prosecuting witness to part with his $2,000 should be squarely within the law. Some of these facts are to the effect that within a day or two after the alleged commission of this extortion the prosecuting witness parted freely and voluntarily with an additional $500 to this defendant. And, indeed, the social relations existing between these two people for some time after the commission of this alleged offense seem to have been of a very friendly character.

A witness was interrogated as to a certain conversation he had with the co-defendant, Azhderian, prior to the alleged extortion. He testified that in answer to the question, "What are you building the house out there for?" the co-defendant, Azhderian, in substance, stated: "The ladies [meaning the defendant and another woman] are dead fly, and I am building this house so that when we leave the Paragon [Nevilles' farm] we can go there. Then I will bring business men out there, and we will get them full of wine, and afterwards blackmail them." A motion to strike out this statement of the witness was denied. The statement should have been stricken out. It has nothing whatever to do with the merits of this prosecution. It was greatly prejudicial to this defendant, for it was well calculated to make the jury look upon her with unkindly eyes. A contemplated scheme by these two defendants to blackmail or extort money from other persons was no more admissible at this trial than the evidence of previous robberies or arsons would have been admissible if defendants had been upon trial for robbery or arson. It is now urged that the motion to strike out was properly denied as coming too late, no objection having been first made to the question. This position cannot be sustained. No objection perceptible to this court could have been well made. It was not until the answer came that it could be ascertained the evidence should not go to the jury, and then the only remedy was the motion to strike out. Many statements made by the co-defendant would have been clearly admissible. And the admissibility of this evidence could not be determined until it was first ascertained what it was. When it is apparent from the question that the answer will contain evidence necessarily inadmissible, then a motion to strike out comes too late, unless preceded by an objection to the question, but the rule is otherwise when the evidence may or may not be admissible.

Defendant now asserts that the trial court permitted other errors in the admission of evidence. Many of these claims are without substantial foundation, while the lack of objections or exceptions forbids the consideration of others. Upon a second trial of the defendant many of these matters will not arise. It may be suggested that evidence tending to show these defendants to have been guilty of immoral conduct between themselves prior to the alleged commission of this crime should not be admitted. Such character of evidence in no way tends to indicate the commission of the crime with which they are charged. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

SALE OF PERSONALTY—RIGHT TO QUESTION VALIDITY—ESTOPPEL.

Where a creditor recognized a sale of her debtor's personal property, so that the buyer expended money thereon which he would not otherwise have done, she and those claiming under her are estopped to question its validity because unaccompanied by an immediate delivery, followed by an immediate and continued change of possession, as demanded by Civ. Code, § 3440, to rebut a conclusive presumption that it was fraudulent and void as to creditors and their successors in interest.

Claim and delivery by Minnie Sullivan against Frank T. Johnson. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Johnson, for appellant. Hinkson & Elliott, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of claim and delivery, defendant justifying as sheriff under a writ of attachment. Judgment went against him, and he takes an appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This attachment was issued in an action begun by the administrator of the estate of Harriett M. Figg, deceased, against Sarah Andrews. This action involves the possession of certain furniture and other household goods situated in a lodging house, of which personal property plaintiff claims to be the owner, as the vendee of Sarah Andrews. For present purposes it may be conceded that the sale of the property to plaintiff by the defendant in the attachment suit was void as to the plaintiff in that suit by reason of the fact that it was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, followed by an actual and continued change of possession, as demanded by section 3440 of the Civil Code. But it is now claimed upon the part of the plaintiff that Mrs. Figg, and, therefore, this defendant, is estopped from raising the question as to the validity of the sale of the furniture to her. Upon this question of estoppel the court made a finding of fact to the effect that the sale to plaintiff was made for a valuable consideration, in good faith, and without any intent to defraud any of the creditors of Sarah Andrews, the vendor, "all of which facts were well known to the said Harriett M. Figg, who consented to the same, and recognized the validity of the sale; and, acting upon said knowledge and acts of the said Harriett M. Figg, plaintiff expended a large sum of money, to wit, about one hundred dollars, on and for said personal property, which she would not otherwise have done." We do not deem it necessary to enter into a detailed recital of the evidence to show that this finding has support therein. It is sufficient to say that the evidence does support it, and, in view of this finding of fact, the defendant, standing in the shoes of the attaching creditor, cannot successfully defend the present action. The case of Escolle v. Frank, 67 Cal. 137, 7 Pac. 425, is directly in point. It is there stated: "If a creditor make any statement or agreement in effect confirming the sale, 'upon the faith of which the grantee acts as he would not otherwise do, or under such circumstances as his subsequent assertion of his rights as a creditor, if permitted, would operate as a fraud, he would be held to have confirmed the transfer.' Bump, Fraud, Conv. p. 458, and authorities there cited. In this case Tresconi recognized plaintiff's purchase, released his attachment, caused the sheep to be returned over to the plaintiff, and upon the good faith of those acts the plaintiff took the sheep, and expended about $400 in and about their care, which he would not otherwise have done. After all this, to permit Tresconi to question the sale would be to countenance a palpable fraud on the plaintiff." For the foregoing reasons, the order denying the new trial is affirmed.

BANK OF ORLAND v. DODSON et al. (Sac. 590.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—DECREE—SALE—VALIDITY—SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

1. A decree in foreclosure taken by default, and a sale thereunder, where actual service was made on defendants, and the record shows on its face that it was by one having authority, were not invalid because the summons was in fact served by one without authority, until reversed or set aside.

2. Where defendants in foreclosure failed to appeal from the decree, and permitted a sale thereunder without objection, and paid a deficiency judgment, they could not attack the decree and sale thereafter for an irregularity in the service of the summons.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county.

Action by the Bank of Orland against T. H. and Ellen M. Dodson. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Charles L. Donohoe and Seth Millington, for appellants. Ben F. Geis, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure. Plaintiff remarks in its brief, "The case is indeed a peculiar one, and none just like it is found in the books." The statement is probably correct. The undisputed facts are that plaintiff brought the action in due time to foreclose a mortgage given by defendants. Summons duly issued April 17, 1896, and was served and returned on April 18, 1896, the return being signed "H. C. Stanton, Sheriff, by C. H. Merrill, Deputy Sheriff." An indorsement made thereon by the clerk shows the service to have been regularly made upon the defendants, and that, the time for answer having expired, their default was duly entered. On May 13, 1896, the court entered its decree, containing the usual recitals, and showing, among other facts, that summons was served upon defendants, and that "the time to appear and demur or answer the complaint having expired, and no appearance having been made by either of the said defendants, * * * the default of said defendants * * * was duly given and made, and regularly entered." The decree then recites that the cause came on to be heard, and evidence both oral and documentary was introduced, from which it appeared that all the allegations of the complaint are true, etc. Wherefore the court found the amount due on the promissory note mentioned in the complaint, to wit, $2,743.55, and decreed the same to be a lien upon the described premises, ordered the sale thereof, and appointed a commissioner to conduct the sale, and also made the usual directions as to a deficiency judgment. The commissioner was duly appointed. He qualified, and on June 10, 1896, he made the sale in due form and upon due notice, and made return thereof, from which it appears that plaintiff became the purchaser for the sum of $2,700, and received a certificate of sale. In his return the commissioner shows that he deducted certain expenses from said amount, leaving $2,680, and paid the same to plaintiff, and took its receipt therefor, which was credited upon the judgment, leaving a deficiency of $63.55, for which judgment was entered July 9, 1896, and was by defendants fully paid August 10, 1896. The period for redemption having expired, the commissioner on January 14, 1897, made and delivered his deed of the premises in due form to plaintiff, which was duly acknowledged and recorded January 15, 1897. Apparently plaintiff became distrustful of the validity of its judgment, because, as it turned out, Merrill was not at the time he served the summons in fact a deputy sheriff; and, acting on this assumption, plaintiff caused the sheriff to make an affidavit to the effect that Merrill was not a duly and regularly appointed deputy sheriff when he served the summons. Whereupon plaintiff on April 12, 1897, filed this affidavit with the clerk, obtained an alias summons, and caused it to be served upon defendants. Defendants appeared by demurrer, which was overruled; and they thereupon answered, and, among other things, averred the facts as to the former trial of the cause, the judgment therein, and that it has not been set aside or modified; set forth the sale pursuant to the decree, and the purchase by plaintiff, the entry of the deficiency judgment, and its payment in full satisfaction of all claims against defendants; and prayed for a dismissal of the action. In this state of the matter, and against defendants' objections, the court proceeded to hear and determine the case upon the original complaint as it was amended at the first trial, and to try the cause precisely as though it had not been already once tried. The court and counsel for plaintiff acted upon the theory that all the previous proceedings were void, and could be treated as though they had no existence whatever.

We think plaintiff entirely misconceived the powers of the court in the premises. It is conceded, and the fact was, that defendants were served with summons. The court had jurisdiction by virtue of this service, for the record shows on its face that the service was made by one having authority, and the court therefore could hear and determine the cause. Until set aside by some proceeding known to the law, its judgment was valid, and it follows that the sale in pursuance thereof was valid. Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 519, 37 Pac. 509; Freem. Judgm. § 126. It is the fact of service, rather than the proof of service, that gives jurisdiction. In re New-man's Estate, 75 Cal. 220, 16 Pac. 887. Defendants, as we have seen, were in fact served with summons. They did not appear, nor in any way call in question the regularity of the service. They took no steps to have the judgment set aside, but permitted their property to be sold, without objection, pursuant to the judgment entered in the action, and they paid the deficiency judgment. They did not appeal from the judgment, and the time for appeal had expired when the alias summons was issued. Under the circumstances disclosed, the defendants could not attack the judgment, and, so far as we know, never threatened to do so; nor did they in any way attempt to prevent the plaintiff from enjoying its fruits. The plaintiff had all the relief under that judgment to which it was entitled under any judgment. The court had no authority to enter upon a second trial of the cause, and its proceedings therein were therefore unavailing for any purpose, and wholly unauthorized. After the court had entered its judgment, it had no jurisdiction to again try the case until that judgment was set aside; and when the alias summons was issued the action was no longer pending, for judgment had been entered, the time for appeal had elapsed, and the judgment had been satisfied. The court was without jurisdiction, and its judgment at the second trial was void. Freem. Judgm. § 127. It is advised that the judgment and order be reversed, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and the proceeding dismissed.

FAST v. STEELE et al. (L. A. 801.)

ADMINISTRATOR'S MORTGAGE—VALIDITY—ORDER FOR—CONSTRUCTION.

1. In view of the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 1578, that the court may prescribe the maximum period of a loan ordered to be negotiated by an administrator, an order to execute a mortgage therefor payable on or before two years from date must be regarded as fixing the maximum period only.

2. An order to an administrator to mortgage real estate did not direct him, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1578, to execute a promissory note, which he did in connection therewith, and the note and mortgage were made due in a shorter time than directed. Held irregularities which, as provided by such section, did not invalidate the mortgage.

3. Where an order of the court directs an executor to make a certain mortgage, the mortgagee is not bound by subsequent oral directions of the judge to the executor, of which he had no notice.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county.

Action by Salathiel Fast against Walter D. Steele, executor, etc., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, William L. Steele and others, defendants, appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Booth, for appellants. W. P. Butler, for appellant W. D. Steele. Grant Jackson, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff foreclosing a mortgage executed to him by Walter D. Steele, as executor of Mrs. C. L. Steele. The defendants who have taken this appeal are interested in the estate of said testatrix. The authority to execute said mortgage was not given by the will of the deceased, but it was executed under an order of the court, made for that purpose upon the petition of the executor; and it is contended by appellants "that the executor has not exercised the power to mortgage given him by the court in the manner prescribed by the order from which all his authority was derived." That order, so far as material here, is as follows: "It is therefore ordered that said executor execute in the name of and for the benefit of said estate a mortgage of all the land and improvements described in said petition to any person, or firm, or corporation who will lend said estate the sum of $1,653.72 in gold coin of the United States of America, payable on or before two years after the date of said mortgage, with interest not to exceed ten per cent. per annum, payable semiannually." This order was made June 17, 1896, and two days afterwards the plaintiff loaned to the estate said sum; and the executor made and delivered to the plaintiff a promissory note therefor, payable "on or before one year after date," with interest payable semiannually at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and also made and delivered to the plaintiff a mortgage upon the premises described in the order to secure the payment of said note.

It is said "that under said order the executor was authorized to execute a nonnegotiable instrument of mortgage, which the mortgagee should have no right to foreclose for two years from its date, and that instead of this he executed a negotiable promissory note payable on or before one year after its date, and a mortgage to secure it." The proceedings to obtain an order to mortgage real property belonging to the estate of a deceased person are fully specified in section 1578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the order, among other things, shall authorize, empower, and direct the executor or administrator "to make such mortgage, and a promissory note or notes to the lender for the amount of the loan to be secured by said mortgage; * * * and may prescribe the maximum rate of interest and period of the loan." Said section further provides that the "jurisdiction of the court to administer the estate shall be effectual to vest such court and judge with jurisdiction to make the order for the note or notes and mortgage, and such jurisdiction shall conclusively inure to the benefit of the mortgagee named in the mortgage, his heirs and assigns. No irregularity in the proceedings shall impair or invalidate the same, or the note or notes and mortgage given in pursuance thereof. * * * The order as made by the court omitted the direction to execute a promissory note. This was an irregularity, but no motion was made to correct it, nor was there any appeal from the order. The executor, however, followed the statute in this respect, and executed a promissory note for the money borrowed. But whether the irregularity consisted in the omission of the court to direct the execution of a promissory note, or in the action of the executor in giving it, appellants have not been injured. It is true that "a mortgage does not bind the mortgagor personally to perform the act for the performance of which it is a security, unless there is an express covenant therein to that effect." Civ. Code, § 2928. As between a mortgagor, acting in his own right, and the mortgagee, by the execution of a promissory note secured by the mortgage a personal liability is created against the mortgagor to pay any deficiency which may remain after exhausting the mortgage security; but the execution of a note and mortgage by an executor or administrator under an order of court does not create any liability for a deficiency, "except in cases where the note or notes and mortgage were given to pay, reduce, extend, or renew a lien or mortgage subsisting on the realty, or some part thereof, at the time of the death of the decedent, and the indebtedness secured by such lien or mortgage was an allowed and approved claim against his estate." The present case does not come within said exception, and therefore the giving of the note creates no liability beyond that which would have been created by the mortgage alone, and appellants are not prejudiced by its execution.

It is further contended by appellants that there was a fatal departure from the authority given by the order, in that the note and mortgage were made payable "on or before one year" after their date, while the order directed that the mortgage should be made payable "on or before two years" after its date. The Code provides that the court "may prescribe the maximum rate of interest and period of the loan," thus leaving it to the discretion of the executor or administrator to make the loan for any shorter period; and in the light of this provision the order should be construed as fixing the maximum period only. In any event it would be nothing more than an irregularity which would not "impair or invalidate" the note or mortgage.

It appears from the findings that at the time of making said order the executor was orally directed by the judge of the court to pay or individually secure to the mortgagee the whole of the interest which was to become due on the note which was to be secured by said mortgage, and that the executor, in order to secure to the plaintiff one year's interest, assigned to him his commissions as executor to the extent of one year's interest. The plaintiff is not bound by this oral direction of the judge to the executor. He is charged with notice of all that the order contains. Whether he would be affected by such oral directions, if it were shown that he had knowledge of them, we need not inquire, since it is neither alleged nor found that plaintiff had any such knowledge or notice. There is nothing in Thomas v. Parker, 97 Cal. 456, 32 Pac. 562, or in Stow v. Schiefferly, 120 Cal. 609, 52 Pac. 1000, cited by appellants, inconsistent with the views here expressed. Edwards v. Taliaferro, 34 Mich. 13, was under a different statute, which required that the order should "specify the amount to be secured by such mortgage, the rate of interest to be paid, and the length of time for which such mortgage shall be given." Neither the petition nor the order contained any of these particulars. Griffin v. Johnson, 37 Mich. 87, is directly against appellants. It was there held that the insertion of an attorney's fee, though unauthorized by the license under which the mortgage was made, did not invalidate the mortgage; that it could only support a claim for the reduction of the amount due. It was further held that an administrator's mortgage is not avoided for mere irregularities, and that a proceeding that cannot affect the substantial rights of the parties cannot be worse than irregular. In Deery v. Hamilton, 41 Iowa, 16, the mortgage was executed by the executrix without an order of court, and without authority given by the will. It was held that "where money has been borrowed by an executor without authority, and the estate has received the benefit of the same, the creditor may recover the amount loaned, with interest thereon at six per cent." None of the numerous cases cited by appellants conflict with our conclusions hereinbefore expressed. We do not doubt that a failure to comply with our statute in essential particulars would invalidate the mortgage, but all that we do decide is that the matters here relied upon by appellants are irregularities only which do not affect the validity of the mortgage. I advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HOULT v. RAMSBOTTOM et al. (Sac. 693.)¹
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—COLLATERAL SECURITY—FORECLOSURE—TRUSTS—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Plaintiff transferred to defendant's agent, as collateral security for plaintiff's indebtedness to defendant, a mortgage on certain real estate, which the agent foreclosed, and under an agreement with plaintiff purchased the property at the face value of the mortgage, taking a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor for the balance due. Plaintiff joined with the commissioner in receipting for the amount of the purchase price, but no money was paid, nor was the evidence of plaintiff's indebtedness to defendant canceled. Held, that plaintiff could not recover the difference in money between the amount of his indebtedness to defendant and the amount of the purchase price of the property at the sale, as the agent held the property in trust as security for the payment of plaintiff's indebtedness; but that plaintiff, on payment of his indebtedness to defendant, would be entitled to a conveyance of the trust property and an assignment of the deficiency judgment.

2. The judgment of the lower court will not be reversed on appeal for harmless error in excluding or admitting evidence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by D. J. Houlst against Robert Ramsbottom and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Minor & Ashley and A. H. Ashley, for appellant. Elliott & Elliott, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brings this action for an accounting with defendant Ramsbottom; also for judgment against him for the surplus resulting from the proceeds coming into his hands upon the foreclosure of certain mortgages held by him as collateral security for plaintiff's debt; also for an assignment to plaintiff of a certain deficiency judgment arising out of said foreclosure proceedings, and for general relief. The court found as facts: That Ramsbottom loaned plaintiff $2,000, and directed plaintiff to execute and deliver to defendant Summerville his promissory note therefor, which was done; that, as security for said note, Ramsbottom directed plaintiff to assign to Summerville a certain note executed by W. J. and J. F. Houlst to plaintiff for $5,500, together with a certain mortgage on real estate and a certain chattel mortgage, both given by said W. J. and J. F. to plaintiff to secure said last-mentioned note; that Summerville had no interest in the transaction, and was acting merely as Ramsbottom's agent, except that subsequently in certain foreclosure proceedings he acted, through his attorney, defendant Webster, for the benefit of plaintiff. Summerville foreclosed the mortgage on the real estate, and the property was sold by a commissioner, and was bid in by Summerville, the plaintiff in the action, for $5,500. A certificate of purchase of the land was issued to him, and for the deficiency Summerville had a judgment. As to this sale the court found that Summerville made the bid and purchase for said sum, and took the certificate in his own name, while acting "as in the matter of said two thousand dollar note, for the benefit of Ramsbottom," and that he (Summerville) had no interest whatever in the purchase; that the foreclosure proceedings were conducted by Webster as Summerville's attorney of record, and said bid and purchase were made by Summerville through Webster, under an agreement with plaintiff "that said foreclosure proceedings should be conducted in Houlst's [plaintiff's] interest, and that fifty-five hundred dollars of the judgment in said proceedings in favor of D. J. Houlst [plaintiff] should be bid and used in the name of Summerville at the foreclosure sale"; that Webster was employed and paid cash in part by plaintiff to foreclose the mortgage, and was promised a further fee if it could be realized from the judgment; that the bid was made for the accommodation of Webster, Summerville, Ramsbottom, and plaintiff, as above stated, and "in pursuance of the premises described in the undenied allegations of the complaint." What these "premises" or "undenied allegations" are the court does not point out. The admissions, so far as we discover, are that Summerville paid no money on account of the purchase; that the judgment in the foreclosure was for $6,417.15 and that he bid $5,500, and that Summerville was credited by the commissioner this amount, and that the certificate of purchase was issued to Summerville. It is further found that plaintiff joined in the receipt given the commissioner for the $5,500 bid, under the agreements hereinbefore mentioned; that prior to the commencement of this action Summerville "orally offered to assign to plaintiff said certificate for less than the amount of said two thousand dollar note"; that Summerville has never assigned the certificate to Ramsbottom, but now holds it "precisely as between himself and Ramsbottom he held the two thousand dollar note,—i. e. for the benefit of Ramsbottom,—he (Summerville) having no beneficial interest therein." It appears that the personal property held in pledge was also sold to Summerville, upon proper proceedings had, as to which sale the court finds that he acted for Ramsbottom, and had no beneficial interest himself therein. The court finds that prior to the commencement of this action the $2,000 note was not canceled or satisfied, nor was there deducted from the proceeds of the pledged property the amount due upon this note. There was a deficiency judgment docketed against the Houlsts in the foreclosure proceeding, as to which the court finds that neither Summerville nor Ramsbottom has ever been ready or willing to assign the same, "save upon the condition that the plaintiff herein pay the full amount due and unpaid upon the two thousand dollar note," on which there appear to have been certain payments made, amounting to $678, including, as we understand the evidence, the proceeds of the sale of the personal property sold under the chattel mortgage. As conclusions of law the court found that Summerville holds the title to the land purchased on foreclosure "in trust as security for, and for the purpose of securing the payment of," the $2,000 note in question; and also holds the deficiency judgment "in manner and for the purposes above stated," and that "plaintiff is entitled to a decree declarative that said Summerville has and holds the said land and said deficiency judgment in the manner and for the purpose above stated"; that plaintiff is entitled to his costs from Summerville and Ramsbottom, and is entitled to no further relief. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It was said in Kelly v. Matlock, 85 Cal. 122, 24 Pac. 612, that: "The holder of a mortgage as collateral security, who causes the property to be sold on execution, and himself becomes the purchaser, does not hold the title as a trustee for his debtor, unless it is shown that he obtained the title by some fraudulent means. He cannot sell an evidence of debt of this kind, but may collect the same when due. Civ. Code, § 3006. And to that end he may foreclose the lien, and himself become the purchaser. Civ. Code, § 3011. If so, and no fraud is shown, he takes the absolute title to the property, and must account to the debtor for the proceeds." If Summerville in the present case had foreclosed his collateral mortgage on his own motion, as he had the right to do, and had bid in the property at $5,500, no fraud appearing, he would have taken the absolute title to the property (subject, of course, to redemption of the mortgagors), and would have been compelled to account to plaintiff for the proceeds; i. e. the amount bid, which would perhaps have entitled plaintiff to what he now seeks. But the facts as found by the court, upon, as we think, sufficient evidence, show that Summerville bid $5,500 at the request of plaintiff, who himself, with Summerville, receipted to the commissioner for that amount, no money in fact passing; and the bid was thus made in excess of plaintiff's debt to Summerville for the benefit of plaintiff in the very amount of this excess now claimed by him. The evidence is that, but for the agreement between plaintiff and Summerville, made with the attorney, Webster, on plaintiff's behalf, the bid would have been only enough to cover the debt of plaintiff to Summerville. The trust found by the court does not arise by reason of the fraud of Summerville, for no fraud was alleged or proved, but it arises from the agreement by which Summerville took the title by purchase at foreclosure sale, and by which Summerville, as Ramsbottom's agent, had an interest in the property to the extent of the unpaid balance due on the $2,000 note of plaintiff, and plaintiff had an interest to the extent of the excess by reason of his being the owner of the $5,500 collateral mortgage note and as mortgagee of its makers. We do not see how plaintiff can claim, on the facts found, that he should be paid in money the difference between the two above amounts. Nor can we see any occasion for an accounting at this time. We think the decree accords to plaintiff his full rights. He may pay to Summerville the balance due the latter, and he would then be entitled to a conveyance of the land, and an assignment of the deficiency judgment; or he may, by appropriate proceedings, have the trust property converted into money, and the proceeds ratably apportioned. It would certainly be most inequitable to compel Summerville to account in money for a surplus which nominally exists by reason alone of plaintiff's acts, but which, by reason of depreciation in values since the purchase, may not now in fact exist at all.

Many of the findings of fact are challenged as not justified by the evidence. Upon the principal question—whether Summerville bid $5,500 for the mortgaged property upon the agreement found—the evidence is conflicting. It was clearly testified to by Webster, and was denied by plaintiff when on the witness stand. The receipt given the commissioner, as well as some other circumstances, tend to corroborate Webster's testimony. We are not at liberty to attempt a reconciliation of this conflict. Upon an examination of the record, we cannot say there was not sufficient evidence to justify the findings.

At the trial, plaintiff attempted in many ways to show the relation existing between Ramsbottom and Summerville in respect of the transactions, but the court refused the evidence, and the rulings are now claimed to be error. The fact alleged and sought to be proved by plaintiff came out, and the court found that Summerville was acting as the agent of Ramsbottom, and that Summerville had no beneficial interest in the loan or in the securities. As the case resulted, and as the facts appeared, we cannot see that plaintiff was in any wise injured by the rulings of the court. There was no dispute that plaintiff got the money, and that it was loaned to him by Ramsbottom; that he gave his note therefor to Summerville, and assigned the collaterals to Summerville as security in the capacity of agent. Plaintiff's rights turned chiefly on the question whether the bid made at the foreclosure sale was for plaintiff's benefit, and by his direction, and upon the agreements alleged by defendants. Upon this point plaintiff testified as to his conversation about the sale with Webster, who was managing the foreclosure, and he testified that he had no conversation with Ramsbottom or Summerville relative thereto. We have examined the assignments of error in excluding and admitting evidence, but cannot discover wherein plaintiff was injured by the rulings of the court, conceding that some of the rulings were error. We can discover no fact which plaintiff sought and was refused permission to prove that would have entitled him to greater relief than he finally was awarded. Upon the whole case we are of opinion that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and so advise.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; COOPER, C.

CAUHAPE v. SECURITY SAV. BANK et al.
(S. F. 1,743.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1899.)

EVIDENCE—HEARSAY—TRUSTS—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL.

1. Where a witness, asked to state how a conversation between himself and one F. began, and who spoke first, etc., answered that he could not say who spoke first, but the matter came up while they were discussing circumstances attending a request by F.'s father to pay a certain sum to plaintiff's intestate, at which the witness was not present, and that he then incidentally asked her if she had paid such sum, the granting of a motion to strike out evidence of the event narrated, as hearsay, was proper.

2. Where plaintiff claimed that a daughter, by promising her father to pay plaintiff's intestate $3,000, had prevented the father from changing his will, and that the daughter, by depositing such sum in a bank, and directing it to pay the dividends accruing thereon to plaintiff, had created a fund to which the trust attached, plaintiff was not entitled, in a suit against the daughter's executors for the money so deposited, to a trial by jury, since such suit was not for money claimed as due on contract, or damages for a breach thereof or for injuries, within Code Civ. Proc. § 592, but was a suit in equity to recover a money judgment in satisfaction of a trust, and hence a trial by jury was not guaranteed by the constitution.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Jean Pierre Cauhape, administrator, etc., against the Security Savings Bank and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. F. Morrison and E. J. Pringle, for appellant. O. P. Evans and S. V. Smith, for respondents.

TEMPLE, J. Plaintiff, in his complaint, besides showing the corporate character of the bank defendant, and the representative character of the other defendants, simply avers that the bank is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,079.20 for money had and received for the use of the plaintiff, for which due demand has been made, and that the other defendants, as executors of the estate of Cora L. Floyd, deceased, claim and assert some right, title, or interest in or to said money, which claim is without right; and plaintiff asks that such executors be required to set forth the nature of their claims, and that the court adjudge them to be invalid, and that plaintiff is the owner of the money, and that he have judgment against the savings bank for the amount. The bank answered, denying its indebtedness, and averred that Cora L. Floyd in her lifetime deposited in the bank $3,000, which the bank still holds, and which is claimed by the other defendants as the property of the estate. The court is asked to determine between the claimants. The executors answered, denying all the material allegations of the complaint, but averring that their testatrix in her lifetime deposited in the bank $3,000, and at the time instructed the bank as follows: "Please pay to Mary Pond, or order, the dividends on my term deposit account (for the sum of $3,000), No. 1,356, until further notice. Cora L. Floyd." The deposit was made January 27, 1874, and Mary Pond, afterwards Mary Cauhape, brought this action, but upon her death the present plaintiff was substituted. Dividends upon the deposit were paid to plaintiff's intestate until the death of Mrs. Floyd, on the 27th day of February, 1891. The executors claim the deposit as part of the estate of Mrs. Floyd. It was stipulated for the purposes of the trial that Henry A. Lyons, father of Mrs. Floyd, died testate, and by his will gave Mary Pond $2,000, which was paid, and left the bulk of his estate to Mrs. Floyd. There is no further evidence as to the character or amount of property disposed of by the will of Henry A. Lyons. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff on this appeal makes two points: (1) The court erred in striking out certain evidence, and (2) in refusing a jury trial.

The evidence stricken out was part of an answer made by A. J. Bowie, a witness for plaintiff, whose deposition was taken upon commission, by questions and answers. Having stated that he was an intimate acquaintance of Mrs. Floyd, and had conversed with her in reference to Mary Pond, he was asked this question: "How did such conversation or conversations begin? Who spoke first, and what was said? State fully and particularly all that was said by both parties, giving the words, if you remember them; if not, the substance of the conversation. A. Can't say who spoke first, but the matter came up in this way: Mr. Friedlander was alone with Judge Lyons one day during his last illness, when he sent for his daughter Cora, and told her what his will was, and that he had left Mary Pond certain money in his will (two thousand or twenty-five hundred dollars, I believe) for her faithful services, and he wished Cora to give Mary Pond on his death five thousand dollars; and, turning to Mr. Friedlander, said: 'Now, Friedlander, I want you to be a witness to this.' Mr. Friedlander was one of his executors, and Judge Lyons' intimate friend. So it was, subsequently, in talking over these things with Mrs. Floyd, that incidentally the Mary Pond matter came up. Knowing her character so well, I incidentally asked her if she had paid Mary Pond that money, in accordance with her father's request. She answered," etc. When the deposition was offered in court, defendants' counsel moved to strike out all down to and including the words, "Now, Friedlander, I wish you to be a witness to this," as hearsay. The motion was granted, and plaintiff excepted. Appellant contends that the recital must have been made in that conversation either by witness to Mrs. Floyd, or by Mrs. Floyd to witness, and in either event was relevant. But I cannot so understand the statement. The witness evidently thought the subject needed some explanation to enable the court to understand the conversation, and thereupon proceeded to recite, not what was a part of the conversation, but a circumstance which may have been familiar to him and Mrs. Floyd. He says that subsequently, in talking over these things, incidentally the Mary Pond matter came up, and, knowing her so well, he incidentally asked her if she had paid the money in accordance with her father's request. The question could not properly have been said to be incidental, if either had during that conversation recited the event narrated in answer to the question. The ruling was clearly right.

It is next contended that the court erred in denying to plaintiff a jury trial. So far as the bank is concerned, the complaint is for money had and received. As the complaint did not show that there was in the possession of the bank any special fund or money which could be the subject of controversy, it may be matter of doubt whether it states a cause of action against the executors of Mrs. Floyd. However, the relief asked against the executors is not such as a court of law could give. The bank denied the indebtedness, but admitted that it was possessed of a special deposit made by Mrs. Floyd, which was claimed both by the plaintiff and by the executors of Mrs. Floyd, and asked to have the matter determined, declaring its willingness to pay as the court should determine. This position was acquiesced in by the plaintiff and the other defendants, and there was therefore no issue to try with the bank. Plaintiff admits that the legal title to the money was in the estate, but contends that in equity it belonged to plaintiff. The argument is that Mrs. Floyd, by promising her father to pay plaintiff the $3,000, prevented him from changing his will in favor of Mary Pond, and therefore the estate received by her from her father is charged in equity with a trust in favor of Mary Pond; and they further contend that when Mrs. Floyd made this deposit, instructing the bank to pay the dividends which should accrue upon it to Mary Pond, she created the fund to which the trust specifically attached. There is much trouble with this theory as applied to the evidence, which it is not necessary to notice, but it is evident that plaintiff brings suit simply to enforce an equity, and not "for money claimed as due upon contract, or as damages for breach thereof, or for injuries." Code Civ. Proc. § 592. The plaintiff seeks to recover a general money judgment in satisfaction of a trust. I think, therefore, the relief demanded in the complaint, as against the executors, the issues made by the answer of the executors, the facts disclosed by the evidence, and the issues actually tried, all show that the action is in equity. In such cases it has been held that the constitution does not guaranty the right to a jury trial. Koppikus v. Commissioners, 16 Cal. 249. The language of the constitution, it is said, has reference to the right as it existed at common law, and the right which was familiar to the people who adopted the constitution. They desired to secure and render inviolate the right which they understood and had always enjoyed. There is no reason to suppose they intended to extend the right of a jury trial to other cases. The decision cited above was made at an early day, and since that construction was placed upon it the constitution has been many times amended, and this provision has always remained unaltered, and, in my opinion, wisely so. The ruling is in accord with the Code provision. The judgment is affirmed.

In re HEDRICK'S ESTATE. (L. A. 786.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—FINAL SETTLEMENT—EXTRA COMPENSATION—SEMI-ANNUAL RETURN—EXPENDITURES.

1. Where it was stipulated that the semiannual returns of a public administrator showed that he had duly paid out as expenses in an estate a certain sum, and that all items of credit contained in his amended final account, excepting the amount of $2,090.18, were correct, such stipulation amounted only to an admission that the returns showed certain total expenses for given periods, and did not admit that the expenditures were just.

2. Code Civ. Proc. § 1632, provides that, on settlement of a public administrator's final account, he may be allowed any item of expenditure, not exceeding $20, for which no voucher is produced, if such item be supported by his own uncontradicted oath, but that such allowances in the whole shall not exceed $500 against any one estate. Held, that such limitation should not be restricted to such expenditures only as had no support other than the oath of the administrator, but included all items of expenditure, not exceeding $20, for which the administrator had no voucher, though supported by his oath and by satisfactory proofs corroborative thereof.

3. Semiannual returns of a public administrator, showing the condition of estates in his hands, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1736, are not accounts stated, and hence are not conclusive on persons interested in such estates, though they made no objection to such returns at the time they were filed.

4. Refusal of a probate judge to allow an administrator extra compensation, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, will not be reversed on appeal, in the absence of abuse of discretion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Judicial accounting by the public administrator, as administrator of the estate of John Hedrick, deceased. From an order settling his final account, and from an order denying him extra compensation, he appeals. Affirmed.

Purington & Adair and Elmer E. Rowell, for appellant. W. J. McIntyre, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal by the administrator from an order settling his final account, and from an order denying him extra compensation.

1. Appellant was public administrator, and became administrator of this estate by virtue of his office in the year 1893. He filed eight semiannual returns, as required by section 1736, Code Civ. Proc.; the first being "for the term commencing December 1, 1893, and ending June 1, 1894," and the last being "for the term commencing June 1, 1897, and ending December 1, 1897." These "returns," as the statute calls them, do not appear in detail, but it is agreed and stipulated that each one "shows that during said term [i. e. the term embraced in each return] the administrator duly paid out as expenses in this estate" a certain sum total, the several amounts of which are given. The administrator filed his final account April 23, 1898, and on July 13, 1898, he filed an amended final account, which latter was the account heard and determined. The following stipulation was entered into at the hearing: "It is stipulated that all the items of credit contained in the amended final account, * * * excepting the item of $2,090.18, are correct; the same having been gone into at the former hearing of the first final account herein filed." Appellant claims, as the result of the foregoing stipulations, that respondents admitted the correctness of the expenditures as shown by these semiannual returns, and, as they form the total of the principal items in the amended final account, their correctness as to that account is also admitted. We cannot so regard these stipulations. The item of $2,090.18 was expressly and specifically contested; and much (indeed, most) of the evidence was addressed to that item, with a view to make legal proof of its correctness, and to show that the administrator should be credited with it. The manifest object of the stipulation as to the semiannual returns was to show that they contained a statement of expenses, and their amount for each period; but it was not intended by the contesting parties that they should be received as conclusively showing the expenditures to be just and proper, and as duly established by vouchers. The stipulation went no further than to admit that the returns showed certain total expenses for given periods.

2. The contestants are the heirs at law of the deceased, and the contested item in the account reads as follows: "By amount paid out for expenses of keeping up and properly caring for the estate as per semiannual exhibits of administrator, filed herein as follows: June 1, 1894; December 6, 1894; June 1, 1895; December 1, 1895; June 1, 1896; December 1, 1896; June 1, 1897; December 1, 1897,—$2,090.18." The administrator testified that this amount was "made up of money paid out for the benefit of the estate, for which there are no vouchers. I get that amount from the regular reports made semiannually to this court." He explained that he arrived at the above sum by subtracting from the totals of each semiannual report the amount for which he had vouchers at the hearing, and adding these different amounts together. He testified that he could only give a general idea of how these different amounts of money were paid out. In one case he said: "It was paid out for car fare and buggy hire, and little things for the ranch,—paid out in cash." In another instance he added to these purposes "for improvements." Again he testified: "In those instances where I testify that these different balances were expended for the benefit of the estate, it would be impossible to remember the items, and the persons to whom I paid them, and the places where I paid them." He further testified that the items entering into the first five of his semiannual reports were taken from a regular account book and cash book; that this cash book has since been lost, and he has been unable to find it; that this book contained the items of expense now charged for; and that he now has no memoranda of any of the items for which he has no vouchers. He testified that the money was expended for the estate, and he personally derived no benefit from any of the expenditures. Some testimony was introduced to corroborate the testimony of the administrator. Section 1632, Code Civ. Proc., provides as follows: "On the settlement of his account he [the administrator] may be allowed any item of expenditure not exceeding twenty dollars, for which no voucher is produced, if such item be supported by his own uncontradicted oath positive to the fact of payment, specifying when, where and to whom it was made; but such allowances in the whole must not exceed five hundred dollars against any one estate," etc. Appellant contends that by a fair construction the statute must be held to mean that the limitation of $500 applies only to such items in excess of that sum as have no support other than the oath of the administrator. He may support his account by his own "uncontradicted oath" to that extent and no more; but that where he supports his account by his own oath, and by satisfactory proofs other than and corroborative of this oath, the excess over $500, no matter how much it may be, must be allowed in the settlement of his accounts. We cannot accept this construction of the statute. Its language is plain and unambiguous, and means, as we conceive, that the administrator may support his account as to an item not exceeding $20, for which he has no voucher, "by his own uncontradicted oath to the fact of payment, specifying when, where and to whom it was made," to the extent in all of $500. Beyond that limit he must support the account by vouchers, and no amount of corroboration of his oath to the expenditures by the testimony of other witnesses will avail to dispense with vouchers; and, as to the $500, he must show when, where, and to whom the disbursement was made. This is the plain and obvious reading of the statute, which, so far as we are aware, has never been questioned by this court. Such loose and unsatisfactory statements as those, made by the administrator, as to when, where, and to whom he made the disbursement, are wholly insufficient. The administrator was confessedly unable to make the statutory proofs, and must abide the consequences of his failure to do so.

3. Appellant claims that the semiannual returns made under section 1736, Code Civ. Proc., must be treated as accounts stated, and conclusive against the respondents (citing Hendy v. March, 75 Cal. 567, 17 Pac. 702), for the reason that they were aware that these returns had been made and filed, and had made no objection to them. Respondents were non-residents, and it is claimed that their resident attorney here, Mr. Harvey Potter, examined the returns from time to time, and made no objection to them, and that he sent two or three of them to the attorney of respondents at their place of residence. We do not think that the return to be made by the public administrator, required by section 1736, could, under any circumstances, be treated as an account stated. It is wholly different from the accounts required to be made by administrators, and for a wholly different purpose, and is not intended to, and does not, take the place or serve the purpose of the semiannual accounts required by section 1622, Code Civ. Proc., and sections following. Before even these latter accounts can be conclusive, they must be heard by the court, and its order made, determining their correctness. The "return" spoken of in section 1736 is not an account in the sense that these other accounts are such. It is not made to the court. There is no hearing upon it, and no order of the court required as to it. No heir is bound by it, nor does it conclusively establish any fact stated in it, as against an heir. The account mentioned in Hendy v. March, supra, was an account stated between two persons having pecuniary relations with each other, and was an entirely different account from the official return of the public administrator in the case before us.

4. The evidence as to appellant's right to extra compensation discloses no abuse of discretion by the court in refusing this allowance. The order must therefore stand. Code Civ. Proc. § 1618. It is advised that the orders appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GLEASON. (Cr. 550.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—MURDER—EVIDENCE—MISCONDUCT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—INSTRUCTIONS—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.

1. Evidence, in a prosecution for murder, that immediately after the shooting a purse with some money in it was found in a pocket of deceased's clothing, and that the pocket was partly turned inside out, is not inadmissible, as tending to prove another crime.

2. That the district attorney, in his opening statement, mentioned facts which he expected to prove, but did not prove, is not misconduct justifying reversal.

3. Where the general charge was not objected to, the refusal to give a requested instruction on the subject of impeaching a defendant who testifies in his own behalf is not ground for reversal, where the instruction failed to state all the means by which the witness might be impeached.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

T. M. Gleason was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion on former appeal, see 55 Pac. 123.

A. J. Bledsoe, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, and the jury fixed the punishment at imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The appellant contends that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the homicide was committed with that degree of premeditation and deliberation which is necessary to constitute murder in the first degree. Upon this point it is sufficient to say that this contention cannot be maintained, and that the evidence was amply sufficient to warrant the verdict.

Dr. Cook, a witness for the prosecution, testified that immediately after the shooting he made an examination of the body of the deceased; and he was allowed to testify, over the objection of the appellant, that he found in a pocket of the clothing of the deceased a purse with some change in it, and that the pocket was partly turned inside out. Appellant contends that this ruling was an error for which the judgment should be reversed, but we do not think so. It is usual, and not improper, to show the condition of the body of a deceased party immediately after the commission of the homicide; and, even if it cannot be considered strictly a part of the res geste, still we do not see how it could have been prejudicial to appellant. Even if it tended in some degree to show that robbery was the motive of the assault,—and that seems to be the particular objection which appellant makes to it,—that consideration would not make the evidence inadmissible. We see no ground for the contention by appellant that the evidence was inadmissible because it tended to prove another and distinct crime.

Appellant, having testified on the witness stand that he feared that deceased was about to attack him with a knife, was asked this question: "Now, I ask you how he could reach you after he stepped two or three feet up, from the distance that you first saw him, —ten or twelve feet,—how he could reach you with a lunge." Appellant objected to this question, and contends that it was improperly asking for the opinion of the witness. We do not think that this contention can be maintained. Considering the testimony of the appellant in chief, the question was entirely proper. It was not asking for an opinion, but really as to the fact of distance between the two parties at the time the fatal shot was fired.

The prosecuting attorney in his opening statement to the jury mentioned one or two facts which he said he expected to prove, but which he did not prove; and appellant contends that this was such misconduct as calls for a reversal. No objection was made to this during the trial; but, waiving the question whether the point is properly presented here, the contention cannot be maintained. It would be going a great distance to hold that, every time a district attorney happens to state in his opening more than he is able to prove, the judgment should be reversed for misconduct; and there is nothing in the present case to show such an extreme disregard for the truth, and such a clear intent to influence the jury by false statements, as would warrant a reversal of the case upon that ground. Usually such an overstatement is prejudicial to the party making it.

The general charge of the court to the jury is not objected to, and it was certainly as favorable to the appellant as he could have reasonably desired; but he claims a reversal upon the ground that the court refused an instruction asked by appellant which is as follows: "You are instructed, gentlemen, that where a defendant presents himself as a witness in his own behalf he subjects himself to the same rules of testing or impeaching his credibility before the jury as any other witness; and he may be impeached by the testimony of other witnesses that his general reputation in the community for truth, honor, and integrity is bad. And in the absence of such impeaching testimony the law presumes that the reputation of a witness for truth, honor, and integrity is good." If this instruction had been in all respects a complete statement of the law on the subject to which it refers, still it is doubtful whether the judgment should be reversed on account of the mere failure of the court to give it, for it might perhaps be truly said that it contains nothing but mere commonplaces within the general knowledge of jurors. However, when it is sought to reverse a judgment for a refusal to give an instruction asked, the instruction itself must contain a full and correct statement of the law on the subject; and the instruction here in question was not of that character. It is said in the instruction that the appellant might be impeached "by the testimony of other witnesses" that his general reputation is bad; and it is further said that "in the absence of such impeaching testimony the law presumes," etc. But "such impeaching testimony" (that is, the testimony of other witnesses as to a man's general reputation) is not the only means by which a witness may be impeached.

The foregoing are the only reasons urged for a reversal, and they are not sufficient to warrant that result. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CAMPBELL. (Cr. 568.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1899.)

LARCENY—FACTS CONSTITUTING—INCLUDED OFFENSES—NECESSITY OF CHARGING.

1. Where one by false pretenses acquired money as a mere bailee, charged with the duty of depositing the funds and taking therefor a certificate of deposit in the name of the bailor, but intending at the time he acquired possession to convert the money to his own use, which he afterwards did, it constitutes larceny.

2. That, under the peculiar circumstances of the commission of a larceny, it might have been punished under Pen. Code, §§ 530, 532, relating to receiving property in a false character and obtaining money by false pretenses, did not make it obligatory on the prosecution to charge the offense under either of these sections.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

A. H. Campbell was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Shinn and S. V. Landt, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant was jointly charged with one Spencer with the crime of grand larceny; the information alleging merely that they "did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously take, steal, and carry away" five hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States, the personal property of Fred Seagrave. The defendants obtained separate trials, and from the judgment which followed his conviction Campbell appeals. The facts disclosed upon the trial appear by the testimony of the complaining witness, Seagrave, and are the following: Seagrave answered an advertisement in a Los Angeles paper which read as follows: "Wanted—A young man of good habits to collect for a large firm. Must be able to drive, and give reference. State age, and where last employed. Five hundred dollars security required; cash or unincumbered real estate. Address M. Box 35, Times Office." He was called upon by Spencer, who represented himself to be an employé of the Patton-Davies Lumber & Fuel Company, a prominent business firm in Los Angeles, and was told that it was this firm which wished to employ a collector. He was taken by Spencer ostensibly to visit the office of the Patton-Davies Company. As they were about to enter the office, Seagrave's companion said, "There is Mr. Davies now," and introduced him to the defendant Campbell, who personated Mr. Davies, of the Patton-Davies Company. The result of the conversation was that the false Davies agreed to employ Seagrave as his collector. The next day they met, and Seagrave accompanied Campbell in a ride about town while the latter was attending, as he stated, to certain business matters. During the progress of the ride, Campbell said: "Now, it will save time if you go round to the bank and draw the money;" the money being the $500 called for in the advertisement, money which was to be held by the firm as security against possible embezzlements upon the part of their collector. Seagrave got the money. Campbell then said: "I have got a few bills I would like to settle, and it would save me so much time. * * * Now, loan me the money to pay these debts in the Stimson Block, and the balance I will put in, and draw the balance out of the firm's money, and give you a certified check around at the First National Bank for five hundred dollars in your name." Elsewhere the witness Seagrave testifies as follows: "Q. Is it not true that you agreed with him that he was to use this money in his business, and he was to make a certificate of deposit for the full money which you delivered to him from his own funds? A. Yes, sir; I made an agreement; that is, it was agreed that he was to use the money just as you say, providing he returned the full amount on that same day. The agreement was that he could use the money and return it; yes, sir. Q. And there was no limit to the amount he was to use? A. No; there was no limit at all. Q. And you delivered to him the five hundred dollars under that agreement? A. Yes, sir; I gave him the money. Q. For their own use and their own business, as you have stated? A. Under that provision; yes, sir." Still further the witness testified: "'Well,' he says, 'now, if you can get that in cash, it will save me the trouble of going around there, and I can pay a couple of bills, and when we come round there [to the bank] we can stick in the balance, and draw out enough to make up the deficiency, and put it in the bank in your name on the certificate of deposit.' Q. Did he say anything about what amount of bills he had to pay, or what they were? A. It was something like between twenty-five and fifty dollars, he said. Q. Why did you let him have five hundred dollars, if it was only twenty-five or fifty dollars that he had to pay? A. Now you ask me a question that I don't know myself, but I handed it to him. It was all rolled up together, and I simply handed it to him. Q. Did he not request you to deliver that money to him, or let him have it to use to pay bills with, and then you were to go down to the First National Bank and get a certified check from the funds of the Davies Lumber Company? A. Yes, sir. Q. Yes, sir? A. Hold on, now. Let me answer your question there. I come to think of it, he demanded the five hundred dollars, and said about paying the bills, and putting the balance what he had left in a certificate of deposit, and he would draw out enough of the company's funds to make up the balance of the deficiency. Q. Did he say how much you would have left, or anything about that? A. No, sir; he said that he had about twenty-five or fifty dollars to pay."

It is of the essence of the crime of larceny that the title to the property alleged to have been stolen shall not have been parted with. If one is induced by fraud or deceit to part with the title to personal property, the law recognizes such a crime as the obtaining of goods by false pretenses, and punishes it accordingly. But it is distinctly not larceny. Upon the other hand, where possession merely has been parted with, or where some special property in the goods, as by way of pledge or security, is transferred, if such special property and transfer be fraudulently secured with the present felonious intent to convert the property so acquired, the offense is recognized as larceny. People v. Raschke, 73 Cal. 378, 15 Pac. 13; People v. Johnson, 91 Cal. 265, 27 Pac. 663. As is said in People v. Raschke: "The most difficult phases of the question arise where a defendant charged with larceny has by false and fraudulent pretenses obtained possession of the property under the guise of a purchase and sale. It is clear that in such a case, where there has been a change both of the legal possession and the entire property of the owner in the thing delivered, there can be no larceny; otherwise, where there has been a change of possession, but no change of property." From the quotations which we have given from the testimony of Seagrave, it is apparent that the jury could have found that, of the $500 transferred to defendant, not more than $50 was a loan. As to the rest, the title remained in Seagrave, and the defendant was a mere bailee charged with the duty of depositing the funds, and taking therefor a certificate of deposit in the name of Seagrave. It is this view of the evidence which the jury must have adopted, and, as no one will question but that there was sufficient shown to warrant a finding that it was the defendant's present intent at the time he acquired possession to convert the money to his own use, the crime of larceny was established. In this view the case is very similar to that of People v. Tomlinson, 102 Cal. 19, 36 Pac. 506.

But appellant objects that the offense proved by the evidence is exactly covered by sections 530 and 532 of the Penal Code, and that he should have been charged under one or another of these sections. There are offenses under these sections which are not larceny, and the mere fact that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the crime, while shown to be larceny, might have been punished under another provision of the Penal Code, did not make it obligatory upon the prosecution to charge under the one provision rather than the other. As is said in People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 152, 40 Pac. 107: "The fact that the circumstances disclosed are such that the defendant might have been charged with and convicted of larceny does not make the offense any less one of the special classes provided for in section 332 of the Penal Code, the circumstances being sufficient to bring the case within that section. Nor does it render defendant less amenable to a prosecution under the latter section." The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. CALIFORNIA LUSTRAL CO.
(S. F. 1,094.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1899.)

MORTGAGE.

When a mining corporation, in good faith, works, by ordinary mining processes, deposits of stone and other mineral on its land, with a view to utilizing the product for commercial purposes, the land so worked is "mining ground," within the act of April 23, 1880, p. 131, § 1, making it unlawful for such corporations to sell, lease, or mortgage any part of their "mining ground, * * * unless * * * ratified by the holders of at least two-thirds of the capital stock," whether the undertaking is profitable or not, and whether sound discretion would approve that use of the land or not.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

Action by J. J. Johnson against the California Lustral Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Fitzgerald & Abbott, Sam Bell McKee, and R. B. Myers, for appellant. E. M. Gibson and Welles Whitmore, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Suit to foreclose a mortgage made by defendant to secure payment of its two promissory notes, each for the sum of $5,236, besides interest. The property mortgaged is a tract of land owned by defendant containing about 104 acres. The defense is founded on the act of the legislature entitled "An act for the further protection of stockholders in mining companies," approved April 23, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 131); the first section whereof provides, among other things, that "it shall not be lawful for the directors of any mining corporation to sell, lease, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the whole or any part of the mining ground owned or held by such corporation, * * * unless such act be ratified by the holders of at least two-thirds of the capital stock of such corporation." The court below found that defendant is a mining corporation, and that said mortgage has never been ratified by the holders of its stock in accordance with the provisions of said statute. But the court further found that the land covered by the mortgage "was and is not mining ground, as specified by said statute, but was and is agricultural land." There was judgment of foreclosure as prayed by plaintiff.

The question most in dispute at the trial was upon the character of the mortgaged premises,—whether "mining ground," within the meaning of said statute, or not. There was evidence without conflict that defendant bought the land for mining purposes, and engaged in the business of taking from a portion thereof, through a tunnel and sundry other excavations, certain rock which defendant called "lustral" or "paint stone," pulverizing the same by means of machinery on the ground, and selling and attempting to sell the product thus obtained, which was to some extent used in the manufacture of paint, and was of some utility for that purpose. Defendant had a mill building on the premises 60 by 140 feet in size, which was "pretty well filled" (such was the testimony) with machinery for drying and crushing the rock. Such business was carried on at and prior to the time of the execution of said notes and mortgage. Some time afterwards defendant ceased operations, and failed in its said business; the total sales of the product having been less than one thousand dollars. A witness produced as an expert testified for plaintiff that he considered said rock to be a common country formation; that it was not mineral bearing, though it had a very small percentage of mineral in it; that it was not valuable for mining ground. It appeared from his evidence, however, that the rock lies in strata, and is different from other formations on the land; also that he considered mining ground to be such as produces mineral in paying quantities. He was asked: "If you mine rock from the earth, and you draw from that rock such mineral as produces paint or polish, don't you mine for that?" and replied, "That would be mining, if the mineral was there in paying quantities." There was other evidence tending to show that the land was chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes.

The defense relied on is hardly conscionable, under the circumstances appearing, and it is with reluctance that we conclude that the decision of the court respecting the character of the land, within the contemplation of the act of 1880, is contrary to the evidence. But the statute declares unlawful a mortgage or other disposition by the directors of the whole or any part of the mining ground of a mining corporation, except upon the ratification of the holders of two-thirds of the stock, and it must be enforced according to its intent. Several instances of its application have occurred. McShane v. Carter,

80 Cal. 310, 22 Pac. 178. Milling Co. v. Kennedy, 81 Cal. 356, 22 Pac. 679. The question is upon the meaning of the terms "mining ground," employed in the statute. It has been suggested that these words should be understood as the equivalent of "lands valuable for minerals" and "valuable mineral deposits," in the statutes of the United States relating to the sale of those parts of the public domain so designated (U. S. Rev. St. §§ 2318, 2319); and hence that land cannot be considered mining ground, under the aforesaid act of 1880, unless it is of such character that, had it been public land, it might have been located as a mining claim and purchased as such from the government. We think, however, that this is not a correct understanding of the statute, and if adopted would lead us into bogs and fens of uncertainty respecting its interpretation. In the first place, the decisions of the officers of the federal land department show that some lands have been held subject to location as mineral under the federal laws which can scarcely be regarded as the subject of mining, in the ordinary sense. Thus, in McGlenn v. Wienbroer, 15 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 370, the department ruled that public land, chiefly valuable for a peculiar building stone thereon, was subject to entry under the mining laws, and not as agricultural land, although it was worked as a quarry only. And so of lands valuable only for deposits of marble (Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 25 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 233); or of petroleum (In re Union Oil Co., Id. 351). Other rulings of similar import might be cited. Unless we are prepared to admit that an ordinary open stone quarry, or a flowing oil well, constitutes "mining ground," as meant in our statute, then we could not accept these rulings as a guide. On the other hand, it is said to have been held by the department in Green v. Grumbley, decided May 20, 1896, that the presence of a thick vein of coal in public land does not render its character mineral, when shown to be not susceptible of mining at a profit. Clark, H. & C. Min. Law Dig. p. 346. Also that bog iron is not a mineral. Id. p. 28. And in Etling v. Potter, 17 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 424, it was held that the presence of gold in land does not characterize it as mineral unless it is in paying quantities. It seems to us that if a California mining corporation should own and mine a thick vein of coal it would be impossible not to hold the ground so used to be its "mining ground," within the act of 1880, whether the operations should prove profitable or not; and so of land which it might own and mine for gold, although the mining might result in loss. In one instance the commissioner ruled that only land containing metalliferous ores should be regarded as mineral, but this decision was reversed by the secretary of the interior, and it seems to be now established as the rule of the department that "lands chiefly valuable for mineral deposits, of whatever kind or nature, may be properly disposed of under the mining laws." Alldritt v. Railroad Co. (Nov. 6, 1897) 25 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 349; Pacific Coast Marble Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 25 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 241.

Again, as we see the question whether "mining ground" means the same thing as land subject to mineral entry, it is set at rest by the decisions of this court. Thus, it is held that a lien given by statute upon "mining claims" cannot be extended to mines operated on land held under Mexican grant or agricultural patent. Morse v. De Ardo, 107 Cal. 622, 40 Pac. 1018; Williams v. Association, 66 Cal. 193, 5 Pac. 85. Surely, however, lands of the latter class might constitute "mining ground." And in Estate of Byrne, 112 Cal. 176, 179, 44 Pac. 467, the foundation of the decision is that a mine or mining ground has no necessary identity whatever with mineral land patented as such by the United States. The case of Ball v. Tolman, 119 Cal. 358, 51 Pac. 546, arose under the statute imposing penalties on the directors of a mining corporation for omitting certain acts required of them in the course of the business. St. 1880, p. 134. One of the defenses set up was that the operations of the company, which ended in complete failure, were carried on in the bed of the Sacramento river, and were not "mining." The court said: "It is immaterial, if true, that the river bed where navigable was not subject to location as a mining claim. The company did mining there, or endeavored to do so, and expended money of the corporation in the effort, and the requirements of the law * * * cannot be evaded by showing that the company was wrongfully searching for gold in a navigable stream."

We suppose there can be no doubt that an actual mine—land subjected to the processes of mining—is "mining ground," in the sense of the statute. What, then, is a "mine," or what is "mining"? In Rex v. Inhabitants of Sedgley, 2 Barn. & Adol. 65, the question was whether certain property from which limestone was obtained, by means of tunneling and other excavations, to be used in smelting iron and in the manufacture of lime, constituted a mine. The court (per Lord Tenterden, C. J.), having adverted to an attempt by counsel to restrict the term "mine" to works for the extraction of metals, proceeded: "If the existence of metal be necessary to constitute a mine, salt works, from which salt is obtained in the way this stone was obtained, will not be mines, nor, indeed, will coal works be mines. * * * And to deny the character of a mine to the works in question would, as it appears to us, be to depart from the ordinary and proper meaning of that word in the English language." In Rex v. Brettell, 3 Barn. & Adol. 424, the court held that similar works for obtaining fire-brick clay were a mine, saying: "In order to determine whether an excavation in the earth constitutes a mine or not, we are to look to the mode in which the article is obtained, and not to its chemical or geological character." In Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Appeal, 85 Pa. St. 344, it was held that, as to coal, a worked vein is a mine, and the court said: "By working the vein, it becomes a mine." In Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, it was held that paint stone found in strata below the surface of the soil, distinct from the ordinary earth, and worked by ordinary means of mining, will pass by the designation of "mines and minerals" in a deed. In Ball v. Tolman, 119 Cal. 358, 51 Pac. 546, dredging the bed of a navigable river for gold—which operations yielded no returns whatever—was yet held to be mining, and among the reasons assigned for the decision was that the method adopted was among the modes of placer mining. In Hines v. Miller, 122 Cal. 517, 55 Pac. 401, it was held that one engaged in the construction of shafts, tunnels, and the like, for prospecting and developing a mine, is engaged in mining as much as he who extracts gravel or ore from the mine. Suppose the shafts and tunnels should fail to strike profitable ore or gravel (which was probably the fact in Hines v. Miller, as the action was to enforce liens for unpaid labor done on the ground); would the operations be any the less "mining"? Or suppose some expert should testify that the ground explored was worthless for any purpose of profit; we think his opinion would hardly justify the conclusion that the ground was not in fact mined, assuming, of course, that the operations were prosecuted in good faith.

We do not hold that the inferences to be deduced from the authorities cited would control the decision of all questions which may arise concerning the proper definition of a "mine" or "mining ground," for the phases in which such questions may occur are perhaps very varied; but in view of the authorities, and considering the object of the statute as expressed in its title ("the further protection of stockholders in mining companies"), we think it clear that when a mining corporation, in good faith, works by ordinary mining processes deposits of stone or other mineral on land owned by it, with a view to utilizing the product for commercial purposes, the land thus worked and exploited is "mining ground," within the meaning of the act of 1880, whether the undertaking results in loss or profit, and whether sound judgment and discretion would approve that use of the land or not.

The expert testimony that the land mined is of no value as mining ground is of no consequence, for the reason, if none other, that in a case such as this it sets up a false standard, viz. that mining ground must be land bearing mineral in quantities which make it profitable for working,—a test which would make the question dependent upon market demand for the product and the thousand varying contingencies of the cost of production.

There is no doubt, on the evidence, that some portions of the mortgaged land were actually mined by defendant with a view to profit, and as to those parts, together with the mill and other appurtenances (McShane v. Carter, 80 Cal. 310, 22 Pac. 178), the prohibition of the statute clearly applied. Whether the tract outside the six or eight acres upon which the mining operations seem to have been directly prosecuted ought to be considered as also within the statute, if proved to be worthless for mining purposes and not necessary to the working of the other, is a question not raised by the record and which we do not decide. The act does not relate to the real property of such a corporation generally, but only to its mining ground. Mining Co. v. Maginness, 118 Cal. 139, 50 Pac. 269. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

BYRNE v. HUDSON. (L. A. 591.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1899.)
MORTGAGES—REDEMPTION—EQUITY—NOTICE—JUDGMENT—APPEAL.

1. Where an absolute deed was held to be a mortgage, in a suit brought for that purpose, a judgment cutting off the mortgagor's equity, unless he paid the sum found due by a time certain, was erroneous, since title remains in the mortgagor until divested by foreclosure and sale.

2. Where a judgment required that plaintiff should pay a certain sum within 20 days after written notice of the entry of the judgment, in default of which her interest in certain land should be divested, a recital in defendant's motion for new trial of the rendition of such judgment was not a written notice, within the meaning of the judgment, and hence did not start the running of the time within which payment, under the judgment, must be made.

3. Plaintiff having failed to pay a sum as required by a judgment, a subsequent entry was made in the judgment book adjudging that "plaintiff's action be, and the same is hereby, dismissed, and that plaintiff be, and she is hereby, barred from all equity of redemption or other right to the property set forth and described in said judgment." Held, that such entry was a final judgment, and hence appealable.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Suit by Olive A. Byrne against Josephus Hudson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and judgment reversed.

J. W. Stephenson and Chas. R. Gray, for appellant. G. A. Skinner, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The transcript in this case is disjointed and confused; but, as supplemented by a certificate of the clerk of the lower court filed here at the date of the oral argument, it is discoverable therefrom that this is an appeal by plaintiff from an order or judgment rendered August 26, 1897, and entered in the judgment book October 6, 1897, ordering and adjudging that plaintiff is barred from all equity of redemption, "or other right," to certain mortgaged premises described in the complaint, and dismissing the action. The parties to the action have produced complications by omissions to assert rights at the proper time and in the proper way, and by acts of such uncertain character as to create embarrassments which ordinary carefulness would have entirely avoided.

It is averred in the complaint, substantially, that plaintiff is the owner of certain described real property, and that defendant has a deed from plaintiff's predecessor in interest which on its face purports to absolutely convey said real property to the defendant, but that said deed was intended as a mortgage to secure a loan of $300, with interest; that she tendered said amount to the defendant, and demanded a deed from him, and that defendant refused to accept this money, and claims that he owns absolute title to the premises. The prayer is that the conveyance to defendant "be adjudged to be a mortgage," and that defendant be decreed to execute a conveyance to plaintiff of the property, and that upon his failure to do so the court appoint a commissioner to make such conveyance. The court found the facts to be as alleged by plaintiff. By the judgment it was decreed that, upon the payment by plaintiff to defendant of the sum of $306,—the amount found to be due on the mortgage,—the defendant execute a deed conveying the premises to the plaintiff, and upon his failure to do so that the clerk be appointed a commissioner for that purpose. The judgment then proceeded as follows: "And if the plaintiff fails to pay to the said defendant the said sum of three hundred and six dollars, without interest, within twenty days after written notice of the entry of the judgment, that then she be barred from all equity of redemption or other right to said property." The part of the judgment last quoted was unwarranted. It is definitely settled in this state that a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, is a mortgage, and conveys no title to the grantee named in the instrument. It has been declared that sections 2924 and 2925 of the Civil Code were intended to abrogate the rule stated in Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117, and to restore the rule declared in Cunningham v. Hawkins, 27 Cal. 603, and Jackson v. Lodge, 36 Cal. 28. See Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 461, 27 Pac. 763; Taylor v. McLain, 64 Cal. 513, 2 Pac. 399; Healy v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 519, 6 Pac. 386; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307, 13 Pac. 866. The rule is stated in Cunningham v. Hawkins as follows: "A mortgage, under our system, as between the parties, does not pass the legal title to the grantee. The title remains in the mortgagor until it is divested by foreclosure and sale, whatever the terms of the mortgage may be." In the case at bar, the court, having found that the instrument in question was a mortgage, and that the parties occupied the relation towards each other of mortgagor and mortgagee, had no power to bar and destroy the plaintiff's title to the property at the end of 20 days, as we have, under our system, no such thing as a strict foreclosure. The court, having declared the instrument to be a mortgage, then seemed to proceed upon the theory that the relation of the parties was that of vendor and vendee under a contract of purchase, and that plaintiff's rights should be ended unless she paid the purchase money within a certain reasonable time. And the case is not one where the plaintiff was seeking to recover possession of the mortgaged premises, which, of course, could not be done without payment or tender of the amount due by the mortgagor. It seems unavoidable to notice this erroneous feature of the judgment, although, as plaintiff has not appealed from that part of the judgment, she is, perhaps, not in the position now to take advantage of the error.

Treating the judgment, as the parties treat it, as a proper and valid judgment, the only two points presented are—First, is respondent's contention that appellant did not pay the money within 20 days after written notice maintainable? and, second, was appellant's appeal from the order or judgment appealed from taken in time?

The judgment provided that the plaintiff should pay the money within 20 days "after written notice" of the entry of the judgment. It is not contended by respondent that he gave plaintiff any formal written notice of the judgment, but on June 28, 1897, he served on appellant's attorney a notice of a motion for new trial, in which the rendering of the judgment was noticed by way of recital. And the money was not paid within 20 days after that time. There is no question here of the sufficiency of a statutory notice, nor was the mere actual knowledge of appellant of the rendition of the judgment material. The question arose out of the express terms of the judgment, which required "written notice of the entry of this judgment." We think, therefore, that as appellant's right in the premises depended upon the commencement of the running of a certain period of time mentioned in the judgment, and as her title was to be forfeited unless a certain act was done within that period of time, she was entitled to a notice expressly intended for the purpose of starting the period of time mentioned in the judgment, and that a mere incidental recital in a notice of a motion for a new trial, given for an entirely different purpose, was not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the judgment.

We also think that the order of October 6th, entered on that day in the judgment book, by which it was "ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff's action be, and the same is hereby, dismissed, and that plaintiff be, and she hereby is, barred from all equity of redemption or other right to the property set forth and described in said judgment," was and is, as against appellant, a final judgment, and that she had six months from its date in which to appeal therefrom. The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The said judgment entered on the 6th day of October, 1897, is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; HENSHAW, J.

PEOPLE v. UNION BUILDING & LOAN ASS'N OF SACRAMENTO et al. (two cases. Sac. 610, 611).

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVER—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

1. Though a receiver is not entitled to file a petition for rehearing of an appeal from the order appointing him, not being aggrieved by the judgment, the court may, on consent of the parties, consider such petition.

2. Where a complaint in intervention was filed on the day of trial, and counsel acknowledged service thereof, but reserved objections to the filing, and afterwards demurred to the complaint, and moved to strike out portions thereof, which demurrer and motion were never heard nor the complaint considered by the trial court, it is no part of the judgment roll, and cannot be considered on appeal.

3. Unless the facts found and alleged justify the appointment of a receiver, the order appointing him is properly reversed on an appeal on the judgment roll, though the evidence before the trial court was not brought up by bill of exceptions.

In bank.

Action by the people, by W. F. Fitzgerald, attorney general, against the Union Building & Loan Association of Sacramento and others. On rehearing. Judgment in department affirmed.

For former opinion, see 58 Pac. 822.

PER CURIAM. This case was heard in department 2, and decided October 20, 1899, by which the judgment of the court below was modified by eliminating therefrom the order appointing a receiver, and as thus modified the judgment was affirmed. Afterwards a petition for a rehearing in bank was filed by Thomas W. O'Neil, the receiver appointed by the court below, who, by stipulation of counsel and permission of the court, had filed a brief in said cause. In the petition for rehearing it was suggested that said brief must have been overlooked by the commissioner who wrote the opinion, or that it failed to reach him. Upon investigation, it was found that said brief on behalf of the receiver, and a reply thereto by appellant L. Tozer, had not reached either the commissioner or the department, and upon that ground alone a rehearing in bank was granted. O'Neil, having no other relation to the case than that of receiver, an officer of the court created by its judgment from which these appeals were taken, has no standing or relation to the case which would authorize him to petition the court for a rehearing, or even to file a brief therein, except as an amicus curiæ. In re Pina's Estate, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332. He had no right of appeal. He was not a party aggrieved by the judgment from which the appeal was taken, and could not have taken an appeal, nor did the service upon him of the notice of appeal give him any standing in this court. He was not a party to the litigation, and had no interest in behalf of or against either party thereto. The only interest he has is that of retaining an office to which he was appointed by the court by its final judgment in a cause litigated by other parties.

The present attorney general has, however, indorsed upon said petition the following: "I hereby consent to the foregoing petition for rehearing, and in this connection desire to add that, from an examination of the transcript on appeal, it appears, through some inadvertence, a stipulation was entered into by this office on the — day of September, 1898, to the effect that the transcript on appeal contained the judgment roll, whereas in fact the complaint in intervention filed in said cause by Grove L. Johnson, intervener, is omitted from the judgment roll as printed in the transcript." It is due to the learned attorney general to remark, in this connection, that said cause was tried under the administration of his predecessor in that office, and said consent was based upon a reference in the transcript to "Grove L. Johnson, intervener." Upon this representation, leave was given to respondent to file in this court a copy of the said complaint in intervention, and leave was also given to appellants to file a copy of the proceedings of the court below thereon; and from said complaint and proceedings, now before this court upon said application to correct the record, it appears that this cause was tried on February 17, 1898, and that said complaint in intervention was not filed until that day; that service thereof was acknowledged by the attorneys for the defendant association, and defendants Steinman, Heilbron, Jones, and Lock, "reserving all objections made as to granting permission to file the same"; that on February 26th demurrers to said complaint in intervention were filed by the defendants, and on the same day notice was given that on March 4th a motion to strike out parts of said complaint would be made. On March 4th said motion was continued one week, and on March 11, 1898, said motion was "continued without day, to be restored to the calendar upon ten days' notice."

It thus appears that the complaint in intervention was not filed by consent of the defendants, that it was filed on the day of the trial, and was not heard or considered by the court, and is still pending therein upon said demurrers and motion to strike out. It therefore formed no part of the judgment roll of the cause that was tried, and cannot be considered upon this appeal. We must assume, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing otherwise, that no application was made by the intervenor to the court below to postpone the hearing of the case until an issue could be formed upon his complaint in intervention, and that all action thereon was waived, so far, at least, as that trial was concerned.

The rehearing having been granted because of the accident by which the briefs above mentioned were not considered by the court or the commissioners, it now becomes our duty to examine them. In the brief on behalf of the receiver it is contended that the action of the court in appointing a receiver cannot be reviewed because the evidence heard by the court below has not been brought up by a bill of exceptions; that the only ground upon which the action of the court can be assailed is a want of jurisdiction to make the order complained of; that, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, it cannot be determined whether or not the court below erred in making the order appointing a receiver, since it cannot be known what facts were before the court, and must therefore presume that the evidence justified the appointment. There is no merit in this contention. To sustain it, we must presume that the court received evidence outside of the issues, which, if properly received, would justify the order appointing the receiver. It is not contended in this brief that the court failed to find upon any fact alleged in the complaint, but we are asked to affirm the order appointing a receiver, because we do not know but that the court may have received evidence of facts not in issue which justified it. For aught we know, facts may exist which would authorize the appointment of a receiver; but, unless the facts as alleged and found justify it, the order making the appointment is properly reversed on appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll.

Again, it is contended that the building and loan commissioners' act is a special statute, and is independent of the general provisions of law regulating the appointment of receivers, and that in cases under this statute "the court is authorized to make such appointment, regardless of general principles." This contention, as well as the further contention that "the findings are sufficient to show the existence of good cause for the appointment of a receiver, even when tested by the rules of equity and by the general provisions of the law," are sufficiently answered in the opinion heretofore filed, and which is hereby approved. See (Cal.) 58 Pac. 822. It is therefore ordered that the judgment entered in department stand as the judgment of the court.

PEOPLE v. FUHRIG. (Cr. 578.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS.

Where one taking decedent's statement previous to her death testified that the part reciting that she made the same knowing that she was about to die was not her language, but that before she signed the statement he read it over to her without interruption, and she declared it to be correct, and her attending physician, present at the time the statement was taken, testified that he could not positively state that decedent appreciated that she was in a dying condition, and she made no preparation for death, and said and did nothing showing that she believed she was about to die, though conscious and able to communicate with those about her, such statement was inadmissible as a dying declaration.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Robert Ferral, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GAROUTTE, J. Defendant, having been convicted of the crime of abortion, appeals from the judgment, and the order denying her motion for a new trial. The most important testimony in the case bearing upon defendant's guilt consists of a so-called dying declaration of the deceased. The conclusion the court has arrived at as to the admissibility of this declaration demands a new trial of the defendant. This declaration was in writing, and signed by the deceased. It began as follows: "Knowing I am about to die, I hereby make this my last statement, and declare same to be the truth, and the whole truth, so help me God." This statement was made in the following manner, as disclosed by the testimony of O. H. Heynemann. He testifies as follows: "My name is Otto H. Heynemann. Am stenographer to the chief of police of this city. Held that position all of December last. Still hold that position. Have seen Dr. Perry. Accompanied Detective Cody to the house of Mrs. Walmsley, at 418 Laguna street, in this city. Got there between ten and eleven o'clock in the morning. Saw Mrs. Walmsley, the deceased, there. Recognize that document. Outside of the signatures, the handwriting in it is mine. The statement therein, except the formal part—the first line—was made by the deceased, Mrs. Walmsley. Detective Cody, Dr. Perry, a lady, and myself were present. Mrs. Walmsley was in bed, sick. Prior to making her statement, Dr. Perry told her that she would probably die, and to make a statement, and tell the truth. Noticed her appearance." He further testified that at this time "she looked to be very emaciated. She seemed to be in a very weak state. She made this statement immediately after the doctor told her she would probably die." The witness continued: "I wrote down the statement she made immediately after the doctor told her she would probably die. The language she used commences on page 2. She used none of the language on page 1. The balance of the statement contains her language. Her language begins with, 'My name is.' I read the whole of the statement to her, including the first page,—the entire statement to its close,—and before she signed it she said that it was all right; and she signed it. She said it was all right. Afterwards Dr. Perry, Mr. Cody, and myself signed it. From the second page to the close of the statement contain the exact words she used. She appeared to be mentally all right." The language which the witness says the deceased did not use, but which he inserted in the statement, is the language which we have heretofore quoted from the statement. The cause of the woman's death was peritonitis, and she died the day succeeding the time of the making of the statement. The foregoing evidence in substance contains everything tending to show the condition of the woman's mind at the time she made the statement.

We find the following definition of "dying declarations" in 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 105: "Dying declarations are statements of material facts concerning the cause and circumstances of homicide, made by the victim under the solemn belief of impending death, the effect of which on the mind is regarded as equivalent to the sanctity of an oath." In the case of People v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72, this court said, "Dying declarations are not admissible in evidence if the declarant had the slightest hope of recovery, although he dies within an hour afterwards." Indeed, there is no controversy here as to the law. The difficulty arises when a given state of facts is tested in the measure furnished by the law. Yet in this case there is no serious difficulty in making the test. We have found no case in the text-books or decisions of courts where hearsay statements have been admitted before the jury under the guise of dying declarations upon evidence so meager as that disclosed in this record. Let us pause a moment to look at the facts, at the same time bearing in mind that the all-important question is, did this woman at the time she made this statement firmly believe that her death was then impending? In other words, did she believe at the time that she was about to die? We lay aside as unimportant the facts that she was emaciated and in a weak state. Hardly to the slightest degree do these circumstances tend to prove the issue. They might be quite material in some cases, but we do not appreciate their importance here. Neither do we attach any weight to the statement of the doctor to her that she "would probably die." The usual and ordinary effect of such a statement by a doctor to a patient would be to infuse in his mind a hope, a possibility at least, of recovery. Such a statement would naturally indicate that the doctor himself still had some hopes of the patient's recovery. Laying this statement aside, we then have nothing left save the declaration found in the written statement as follows: "Knowing I am about to die, I hereby make this last statement, and declare." This excerpt from the writing must form the foundation upon which to rest the admissibility of the dying declaration, or a foundation is lacking. Yet the difficulty at once presents itself that this statement was a declaration made by the stenographer, and not by the woman. The condition of the mind when a purported dying declaration is made may be determined by the acts or the language of the party. These acts and this language may unite in tending to show one condition of mind, or they may each point to a different condition of mind, and when they are inconsistent the conduct of the patient may indubitably overthrow any conclusion based upon his language, and the reverse may be equally true. So it is not in every case of a statement by the patient that he believes himself about to die that a sufficient foundation for the admission of his declarations is created. But, as suggested, we have not even that here. A statement consisting of 184 words is read to this dying woman without break or interruption. At the conclusion of the reading she stated it was all right, and signed it. It therefore results from the foregoing that the entire basis for the admission of these declarations rests upon a ratification by the unfortunate woman of the stenographer's statement to the effect that she knew that she was about to die. And this ratification of the statement is found in a general assent to the correctness of the entire contents of quite a long written document. To sustain the people in their contention upon this point would be going beyond sound legal principles. If the particular statement of the stenographer had been separately and directly called to the attention of the woman, and she had understandingly and unconditionally declared such statement to be the truth, the question here presented would be different. Certainly a much stronger showing would then be made. But we have no such case, and the showing made is entirely too weak.

We are more fully impressed with the soundness of this conclusion when we find the physician, who had paid her several professional visits, and who was present when the purported dying statement was made, in answer to the question put by the district attorney, "Could you tell, doctor, from her statement [referring to the statement here under consideration] and manner, whether or not Mrs. Walmsley appeared to appreciate the fact that she was in a dying condition?"—saying, "Not positively, I could not." If the attending physician, who knew all about the woman's condition, who had told her that she would probably die, who was in possession of all the evidence that was before the reporter when he made the statement, and which was before the court upon this trial, and who was present when the statement was made, was unable to make a positive declaration that the woman thought she was about to die, then surely her belief of impending death was not plainly manifest. In addition to all this, she made no preparation whatever for death; gave no direction as to her effects; offered no suggestion as to a final parting with her friends and relatives; said nothing and did nothing to indicate that the hand of death was laid upon her. Yet all this time she was fully conscious, her mind was clear, she could talk and use her hands. The trial court justified its ruling in admitting this statement as a dying declaration upon the authority of People v. Bemmerly, 87 Cal. 117, 25 Pac. 266, but upon a careful consideration of that case the court finds nothing there furnishing authority for the ruling here made. In that case it is said, "Allunde the written declaration there is sufficient evidence that it was made under a sense of impending death." Again it is said, "Whether the statement alone would be sufficient to satisfy the rule that the declaration must be made under a sense of impending death need not be decided in this case, as there was other evidence that it was so made." We also find a broad chasm dividing the two cases in their facts, in this: In the Bemmerly Case the party writing the dying declaration of the wounded man placed nothing therein except what had been in substance stated to him. In the case at bar the writer of the declaration bodily placed declarations of matters therein which had never even been suggested by the unfortunate woman. Again, in the Bemmerly Case the statement after being written was read to the wounded man a single sentence at a time, and then indorsed by him as true, sentence by sentence. Thus, every separate sentence was brought directly home to his mind. In the case at bar the statement was read to the woman in bulk, and only indorsed by her in the same way. From what has been said the great difference in the facts of the two cases is readily perceptible. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

COSTA v. SILVA. (Sac. 597.)

ORAL AGREEMENT TO BUY LAND—RESULTING TRUST—TRIAL—EVIDENCE—OPINION.

1. Plaintiff purchased from defendant an undivided one-fourth interest in a mining claim, but took no deed, and the parties went into possession, and worked the claim jointly for a number of years. Defendant recognized plaintiff's interest, and requested and received payment for one-fourth of the expense of securing a patent, but refused plaintiff a deed of his interest. Held, that defendant held one-fourth of the land in trust, and that plaintiff was entitled to a deed therefor.

2. A judgment supported by the findings will not be reversed on appeal because of a finding, on an immaterial matter, contrary to the evidence.

3. Evidence that defendant requested and received money from plaintiff to pay a portion of the expense in securing a patent to a mining claim is admissible to show that defendant held a portion of the claim in trust for plaintiff.

4. Where plaintiff testified to facts showing himself entitled to a one-fourth interest in a mining claim, of which defendant held the legal title, the fact that a portion of such testimony objected to and received was matter of opinion was not reversible error.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Siskiyou county.

Action by Enos Costa against Joseph Silva. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Warren & Taylor, for appellant. Gillis & Tapscott, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The case is here on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. It appears from the unchallenged findings as follows: That about 24 years ago the plaintiff bought a one-fourth interest in a certain mining claim described in the complaint, containing 63.51 acres, and paid therefor the sum of $400, but took no deed for the same. That both plaintiff and defendant went into possession of said claim, and each had a residence thereon, and for a number of years they worked said claim jointly. That during their residence thereon they each cultivated a portion thereof, and that defendant has continued to reside thereon from the time plaintiff first went into possession up to the present time. That a short time prior to the middle of October, 1896, the defendant recognized the one-fourth interest of plaintiff in and to said claim, and then proposed to plaintiff that they take steps to get a patent to said claim jointly, and that plaintiff should pay one-fourth of the expenses of getting the patent, and that the defendant should pay three-fourths, to all of which plaintiff agreed. That they then jointly had the said claim surveyed, and plaintiff, at the request of defendant, contributed his services in making the survey and paid a portion of the expenses thereof. That plaintiff understood that the patent to said claim would be procured in the names of plaintiff and defendant jointly, and they went to the office of their attorneys, in Yreka, who had been employed to procure the patent for them, and each paid a portion of the expenses necessary to obtaining said patent. That plaintiff paid towards the expense of surveying the claim and getting a patent the sum of $45. That prior to October, 1896, the defendant made application, under the Revised Statutes of the United States, to purchase the said claim, and thereafter, about the middle of October, 1896, made final proof in the United States land office at Redding, in Shasta county, and received a certificate of purchase therefor in his own name. That, after the said certificate of purchase was so issued to the defendant, plaintiff demanded of defendant a deed to a one-fourth interest in and to said claim, and defendant then refused, and still refuses, to execute or deliver such deed or any deed to plaintiff. As conclusions of law, the court found that the defendant holds the undivided one-fourth of said claim in trust for plaintiff, and that plaintiff is entitled to a deed from defendant for said one-fourth interest. A decree was accordingly entered.

We think the above findings support the judgment. The plaintiff having paid for a one-fourth interest in the property, the defendant for many years having recognized this interest, and the plaintiff finally, in pursuance of the understanding of the parties, having contributed towards the expense of surveying the claim and procuring the title thereto, the title, when procured, was for the benefit of plaintiff as well as defendant, in proportion to his interest therein. To now allow the defendant, in violation of his agreement, to keep the property for which plaintiff has paid his money and labor, would be the most flagrant injustice. If a court, under such circumstances, could not afford relief, it would be a sad commentary upon the law.

The defendant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain findings 8 and 9 and portions of finding 4. Without passing upon the question as to whether the evidence is sufficient in the respects specified, it clearly appears that the judgment is supported by the findings other than those attacked. While findings 8 and 9 and the portions of finding 4 to which our attention is called are not necessary to support the judgment, yet they are not inconsistent or in conflict with the ultimate findings upon which the judgment rests. In such case, they may be disregarded. A finding contrary to the evidence, upon an immaterial matter, is not prejudicial error, if the ultimate facts found support the judgment.

Certain questions were asked of the witness Solus and of plaintiff, while a witness upon the stand, for the purpose of showing that in 1896, before the defendant filed his application for the claim, he asked plaintiff to contribute towards his one-fourth interest, and help pay for the surveying, and that plaintiff did at that time pay $40 towards the survey. The evidence was objected to by defendant upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and an attempt to prove a contract concerning real estate by parol. The court overruled the objections, and the rulings are assigned as error. We think the evidence was material, and it was not offered for the purpose of proving a parol agreement to convey land. It was competent for the purpose of showing that plaintiff paid money to defendant at his request, and for the purpose of procuring the title for the common benefit of plaintiff and defendant. Where a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration thereof is paid by another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by whom the payment is made. It has always been held competent to prove by parol the payment of the consideration. The plaintiff testified that 24 or 25 years ago he first went to live on the claim; that he worked there, mining, for three years with defendant; that he had then bought and paid for a one-fourth interest, and claimed such interest; that defendant bought his interest one year before plaintiff. The plaintiff was then permitted to testify, under defendant's objection, that they divided the money taken from the mine; that plaintiff received one-fourth of it; and that defendant recognized his one-fourth interest in the mine. Part of the testimony was a mere opinion of the witness, but he stated the facts fully in other parts of his testimony, and we do not think the objectionable part of sufficient importance to make it ground for reversal. The findings concerning which no complaint is made support the judgment. The testimony in the record is without conflict. The defendant did not deny the facts as stated by plaintiff. The judgment and order are affirmed.

CHILSTROM v. EPPINGER et al. (L. A. 585.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1899.)
JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—ACTION ON APPEAL.
BOND—ASSIGNEE OF JUDGMENT.

Where an appeal was taken from a judgment rendered in a justice's court, and the judgment was assigned pending the appeal, but the undertaking on appeal was not assigned, the assignee could not maintain an action on such undertaking.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county.

Action by P. O. Chilstrom against H. Eppinger, Jr., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Louis Lamy and G. & A. Webster, for appellants. S. M. Swinnerton, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The action is by the assignee of the judgment to recover on the undertakings given on appeal, and to stay proceedings. A judgment was rendered in the justice's court in favor of Morgenson, plaintiff, against Grabow, defendant. An appeal was taken, and the undertakings here sued upon were given to support it. Before determination of the appeal, Morgenson assigned his judgment to P. O. Chilstrom, plaintiff in this action. He made no assignment of his rights upon the undertakings. After the assignment of the judgment, the appeal was dismissed, and Chilstrom instituted this action, in which he recovered judgment, from which defendants appeal.

In Moses v. Thorn, 6 Cal. 87, it was held that, in the absence of an assignment of the undertaking, the assignee of the judgment could not maintain an action against the sureties upon the appeal bond, the reasoning being that the contract of the sureties was entirely distinct from, and independent of, the judgment, was not a necessary incident to it, and the rights under it did not pass by assignment of the judgment. See, also, Dray v. Mayer, 5 Or. 185. The point is determinative of this appeal, for we can perceive no distinction between a case where the judgment has been assigned after it has become a finality and the case at bar, where the judgment was assigned pending the termination of the appeal. The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

PEOPLE v. HAWKINS. (Cr. 551.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION —WAIVER—ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON
—EVIDENCE—CONDUCT AT ARREST—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Under Pen. Code, § 1382, providing that the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed, if a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within 60 days after the finding of the indictment or filing of the information, a defendant waives such right by allowing a jury to be impaneled and sworn without first raising objection.

2. Defendant called the person assaulted to him, and told her "to say her last blessing," at the same time drawing a dirk knife, and making a motion with it towards her. She seized his hand, and at the same time he was caught and held by parties entering the room, and, when arrested, resisted. Held, the evidence was sufficient to justify a verdict of assault with a deadly weapon.

3. Evidence of the conduct of defendant, charged with a crime, at the time of his arrest, is admissible, when he knew of the officer's design to arrest him, though the officer did not in words so inform him.

4. Where defendant was found guilty of assault with a deadly weapon, thereby acquitting him of assault with intent to murder, there was no error in refusing an instruction that it must appear that defendant had the intent to murder, and attempted to carry it into effect, "and was only prevented from so doing by some interposition not of his own will."

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county. Jesse E. Hawkins, convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, appeals. Affirmed.

Forrest L. Alford and E. W. Holland, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

BRITT, C. 1. On December 2, 1898, an information was filed by the district attorney in the court below accusing defendant of the crime of assault with intent to murder, specifying also that the assault was committed with a deadly weapon. Section 1382, Pen. Code, contains the following provision: "The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed in the following cases: * * * (2) If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information." January 13, 1899, the court made an order setting defendant's case for trial on February 3d following. On said February 3d defendant was present in court, with his counsel, and announced that he was ready for trial. A jury was then impaneled and sworn to try the case, whereupon defendant moved the court to dismiss the action, and discharge him, on the ground that he had not been brought to trial within 60 days after the information was filed. The court denied the motion. The trial proceeded, and resulted in a verdict of guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon, upon which sentence of imprisonment was pronounced. There is no duty incumbent on the court to order dismissal under said section 1382 unless the defendant demands it (Ex parte Fennessy, 54 Cal. 101); so that the right, like other statutory privileges of the accused which do not affect the jurisdiction of the court, may be waived. It is well settled that the impaneling of the jury is part of a trial. Silcox v. Lang, 78 Cal. 118, 20 Pac. 297. The legal jeopardy of the defendant has attached when a jury has been "charged with his deliverance," and the jury stands thus charged when its members have been impaneled and sworn. Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 399. When, therefore, the defendant here moved for dismissal, he had been "brought to trial," and was upon trial, without previous objection that the limit of 60 days had expired. If he could then raise the objection for the first time, he could raise it as well on the announcement of the verdict, or at any other stage of the trial. We are satisfied that the statute never was designed for such uses, and must hold that defendant waived its benefit (if he was entitled thereto) by failure to claim it in proper season. The following cases tend to sustain this conclusion: People v. Bennett, 114 Cal. 56, 58, 45 Pac. 1013; Polack v. Gurnee, 66 Cal. 266, 5 Pac. 229, 610; People v. Romero, 18 Cal. 89; People v. Johnson, 104 Cal. 418, 38 Pac. 91.

2. It is claimed that the evidence did not justify the verdict; chiefly, it seems, on the assumed ground that an attempt at actual violence was not proved. There was testimony for the prosecution tending to show the following circumstances: The person assaulted was a girl about 16 years of age, who was employed as a domestic at the house of defendant's mother, where, also, defendant resided. Defendant was enamored of the girl, and she had accepted some attentions from another man. Defendant, inflamed with jealousy, and probably with liquor, caused the girl, on a frivolous pretext, to arise from bed and dress herself about the hour of 12 midnight, and come to him in an adjacent room. He told her "to say her last blessing," at the same time drawing a dirk knife, and making a motion with it towards her. She seized his hand holding the dirk, and begged him not to touch her. At this instant defendant's mother rushed screaming into the room, and laid hold of him. Other persons in the house were aroused, and came in, and tried to pacify the defendant. He said he would "die the death of a murderer; would die before the sun rises; would meet the girl in heaven before morning." A constable was summoned, and defendant, with force and arms, resisted arrest. It is plain that this evidence, which was given at the trial with much elaboration of detail, made a question for the jury whether defendant had attempted violence with the weapon upon the prosecuting witness, and that it sustains the verdict.

3. It is argued that the court erred in allowing evidence of the conduct of defendant at the time of his arrest, which followed a few minutes—possibly half an hour—after the assault. The only plausible ground advanced for this objection is that the officer did not state to defendant that his purpose was to arrest him. It seems unnecessary to set out the evidence on this point. Although the officer did not, in words, inform defendant that he intended to arrest him, yet it is perfectly clear that defendant knew such to be his design. The evidence objected to was rightly admitted. People v. Shem Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 380, 1 Pac. 347; People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 554, 39 Pac. 944.

4. Defendant requested the court to instruct the jury, in substance, that, before he could be convicted of an assault with intent to murder, it must appear that he had such intent, and attempted to carry it into effect, "and was only prevented from so doing by some interposition not of his own will." The court gave the instruction, and much more of similar import, omitting, however, the words which we have quoted. Defendant claims that the court erred in striking those words from the charge. It is sufficient to say in this behalf that, since the jury found him guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon only, thus acquitting him of any intent to kill, it is impossible that he could have been injured by failure to instruct on the means by which he was prevented from effectuating an intent which he never had. There is no material error in the record, and the judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

DAVIS v. PACIFIC TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (S. F. 1,097.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1899.)

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—MALICIOUS DESTRUCTION OF TELEPHONE WIRE.

Under Pen. Code, § 591, prohibiting malicious injury or removal of a telegraph wire, and section 4, providing that the rule of common law that penal statutes are to be strictly construed shall not apply to the Penal Code, a criminal prosecution will lie for the illegal destruction of a telephone wire, as "telephone" is included within the meaning of the term "telegraph."

In bank. On rehearing. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 57 Pac. 764.

HENSHAW, J. A rehearing was granted in this case for consideration of a question not discussed in the department opinion, namely, whether "telephone" is included within the meaning of "telegraph," as used in section 591 of the Penal Code. It appeared that in the criminal action the defendant was charged with cutting telegraph wires, while the facts without dispute disclosed that the wires which he cut were used as telephone wires. The importance of the consideration in the case at bar arises from the fact that, if telephone wires are not within the purview of section 591, it would tend to show lack of probable cause to procure the arrest and prosecution of a person charging him with cutting telegraph wires, when the known fact was that he had cut telephone wires. The cases are numerous where the question has come under consideration, and the holding of the courts has been uniform that "telephone" is included within the meaning of "telegraph." Many of these cases are noted in 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, at page 746. In Attorney General v. Edison Telephone Co. of London, 6 Q. B. Div. 244, it was held that a telephone was a telegraph, within the meaning of the telegraph acts, although the telephone was not invented or contemplated at the time of the passage of those acts. It was further declared that a conversation through the telephone was a message, or at all events "a communication transmitted by a telegraph, and therefore a telegram, within the meaning of the acts." In City of Richmond v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 28 C. C. A. 659, 85 Fed. 19, the circuit court of appeals, construing an act of congress of 1866 relative to "telegraph companies," and answering the question whether those words included telephone companies, declared that each was but a form of use, the product and result of the same principle, and that the names were only used to distinguish the method of communication. In Chesapeake & P. Tel. Co. v. Baltimore & O. Tel. Co., 66 Md. 399, 7 Atl. 809, the court, in construing an early act relative to telegraph companies, declared that the term "telegraph," which means and includes any apparatus or adjustment of instruments for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric currents and signals, embraces the telephone. In Iowa Union Tel. Co. v. Board of Equalization, 67 Iowa, 250, 25 N. W. 155, it was held that, by reason of the substantial identity of telephonic and telegraphic modes of communication, the telephone company was to be regarded, for purposes of taxation, as coming under the denomination of a telegraph company. These cases are sufficient by way of illustration, though many more could be instanced. They are civil cases, it is true, but they at least serve to show the unanimity and uniformity of the courts' holdings upon the question. If the consideration could be limited to a strict etymological point of view, it would have to be conceded at once that there is a difference in the meaning of the two words,—the one conveying the idea of transmission of writing to a distance; the other, the transmission of sound to a distance. In the very early history of the telegraph it is a matter of common knowledge that there was an actual recordination of letters under the Morse code. That soon passed away, and the telegraph operator of to-day receives by sound upon a principle no different from that which obtains in the telephone. Again, in the case of submarine cables neither sound nor writing is always employed, but the varying deflections of an indicator within sight of the receiver serve the like purpose. The words therefore cannot be limited to their etymological meaning, and consideration must be had to their present sense and acceptation. Anderson (Dictionary of the Law), defining "telegraph," says that it "includes any apparatus for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electric signals." Defining "telephone," he declares it to be "a conversation held through a telephone; a message or a communication transmitted by a telegraph; a telegram. A telephone is a telegraph. The idea conveyed by each term is the sending of intelligence to a distance." Accepting these definitions,—and they are well supported,—the term "telegraph" means any apparatus for transmitting messages by means of electric currents and signals, and embraces within its meaning the narrower word "telephone."

But is this construction justifiable in the case of the penal statute? Section 4 of our Penal Code provides that "the rule of the common law that penal statutes are to be strictly construed has no application to this Code. All its provisions are to be construed according to the fair import of their terms with a view to effect its object and to promote justice." In contemplation of this section, in recognition of the fact that a substantial identity exists between the two words, we think no hesitation need be expressed in declaring that under section 591 of the Penal Code a criminal prosecution will lie for the illegal destruction of a telephone wire. The opinion heretofore rendered in department is therefore adopted, and the judgment is affirmed.

SOUTH SAN BERNARDINO LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO. v. SAN BERNARDINO NAT. BANK. (L. A. 500.)

TRUSTS—APPEAL AND ERROR—ESTOPPEL.

1. A complaint stated that R. and seven others purchased land under an agreement that each should share in proportion to the amount of the price paid; that, though R. paid but one-tenth of the price, he received one-eighth of the land under the deed, which conveyed the land to the eight grantees in equal portions; that all the grantees had conveyed their interest to plaintiff except R., who conveyed an undivided one-tenth to plaintiff's grantor; that thereafter defendant purchased all R.'s interest in the land under execution against him, with notice of plaintiff's rights therein, and that plaintiff had demanded a conveyance from defendant, and prayed that he be declared constructive trustee of the title held by him for, and be decreed to convey it to, plaintiff. Held, that since the complaint showed that R. received the title to one-fortieth of the property, the price of which had been paid by plaintiff's grantors, and that defendant took such title with notice, the complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against defendant.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, declaring that a judgment is a bar to a subsequent action only "when the same thing under the same title" is litigated, a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to quiet title is not res judicata of plaintiff's rights in a subsequent action to declare defendant a constructive trustee for plaintiff in the same land.

3. Where a judgment was rendered for defendant, he is not entitled to make objections to the complaint on plaintiff's appeal, unless the complaint is so defective that it would not support any judgment in plaintiff's favor.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

Action by the South San Bernardino Land & Improvement Company, a corporation, against the San Bernardino National Bank, a corporation. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Caldwell & Duncan, for appellant. J. G. North and Curtis & Curtis, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action to enforce a trust and compel a conveyance. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

1. The substance of the complaint is that one Rosenthal and seven others bought certain lots of the Rancho of San Bernardino, said Rosenthal and five others paying each one-tenth, and the other two each paying two-tenths of the purchase price of said lots; that the eight persons were to have proportionate interests in the land purchased equal to the amount paid by each of them; that they subsequently received a deed to the lots, which deed failed to designate the interest conveyed to each of the grantees; that thereafter all the grantees named in said deed formed the corporation plaintiff, and all except Rosenthal conveyed all their interest in the property to the plaintiff; that Rosenthal conveyed an undivided one-tenth of said property to one Boggs, who subsequently conveyed the same to plaintiff; that thereafter defendant herein, in a suit against said Rosenthal and another, seized, sold, and bought in under execution all the right, title, and interest of said Rosenthal in and to said property, and obtained a sheriff's deed therefor; that defendant purchased said property with notice of plaintiff's rights therein; that plaintiff had demanded a conveyance of defendant, which defendant had refused. Plaintiff prays that defendant be declared a trustee of the legal title for the benefit of plaintiff, and that defendant be compelled to convey to plaintiff.

2. The first question to be determined is that raised by a general demurrer to the complaint: Does the complaint state a cause of action? It appears from the facts set forth in the complaint, and recited above, that, while Rosenthal paid but one-tenth of the purchase price of the property, there was conveyed to him by the deed an undivided one-eighth of said property. Having thereafter conveyed to the plaintiff corporation a one-tenth interest in the property, there was still left some sort of title in him to an undivided one-fortieth of said property, and to this one-fortieth the defendant has succeeded. The question is, do the facts stated in the complaint show that defendant holds this one-fortieth interest in trust for plaintiff? If this question is answered in the affirmative, then the complaint states a cause of action. It is settled law that where one pays the purchase price of land, and the land is thereupon conveyed to another, the title to the land is held, under such conveyance, in trust for the person who has paid the purchase price. Civ. Code, § 853. This principle is also applied so as to make the payment of a part of the purchase money carry with it a proportionate equitable estate in the land purchased equal to the amount paid (2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1038); and the cestui que trust may, in a court of equity, compel a conveyance to himself of the legal title, as well from any one succeeding to the title of the trustee with notice as from the trustee himself (Id. § 1043; Case v. Codding, 38 Cal. 191; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 153, 45 Pac. 866). The facts stated in the complaint show a sale, and the proportion of the price paid by each grantee, and bring the case clearly within the principle of the authorities cited above; and the complaint is certainly good as against the general demurrer interposed. If there is any uncertainty in the complaint as to the time of the payment of any part of the purchase price of the land by any of the vendees, such uncertainty could only be reached by special demurrer based upon that ground. In the absence of any special demurrer to the complaint, it is unnecessary to specially notice the other points urged in respondent's brief as to the sufficiency of the complaint. It may be proper also here to say that the defendant, not having appealed, cannot be heard on any objection to the complaint unless the complaint is so defective in averment that it would not support any judgment in plaintiff's favor. Bates v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 479, 30 Pac. 605, 16 L. R. A. 745.

3. Defendant pleaded in bar a judgment in his favor and against plaintiff, rendered in a former action to quiet title, which action was brought by plaintiff herein against defendant herein; and the judgment of the court below in defendant's favor is based entirely on a finding favorable to defendant on this plea in bar. In an action to quiet title, the relief sought in the case at bar could not be obtained. This action, being to enforce a trust and compel a conveyance, proceeds on the theory that the legal title is in the defendant, whereas a suit to quiet title ordinarily proceeds upon a contrary theory, and cannot be maintained against the holder of the legal title. The former judgment is conclusive between the parties only "when the same thing under the same title" is litigated. Code Civ. Proc. § 1908. We think, therefore, that the findings of the court and conclusions of law should have been for plaintiff on the plea in bar. Plaintiff should not be estopped from maintaining an action for relief that he is entitled to on the facts as they exist because he previously mistook his remedy, and tried to maintain an action that he never was entitled to. The foregoing views find support in the following cases: Von Drachenfels v. Doolittle, 77 Cal. 295, 19 Pac. 518; O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 16 Pac. 236; Harrigan v. Mowry, 84 Cal. 457, 22 Pac. 658, and 24 Pac. 48; Shanahan v. Crampton, 92 Cal. 9, 28 Pac. 50. We advise that the judgment and order denying a new trial be reversed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

CRUSOE v. CLARK. (L. A. 595.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

CONTRACTS—EVIDENCE—WITNESSES—COMPETENCY—MASTER AND SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS—APPEAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

1. Where a contract is pleaded and relied on as a defense to an action, evidence as to another contract, not pleaded, is inadmissible, as not being within the issue.

2. A witness cannot be impeached by contradictory statements as to matters irrelevant to the issues; hence, where plaintiff was permitted to testify to irrelevant matter, it was not error for the court to refuse to allow defendant to introduce testimony tending to contradict it.

3. The fact that plaintiff's witnesses, called to testify as to the value of services rendered by him, resided in another city of the same county, and admitted that they did not know the value of like services in the city where they were performed, does not render their testimony incompetent, where they were present in court, and heard plaintiff describe the nature and extent of his services, were business men of experience, and had employed persons for services similar to those performed by plaintiff, and testified that they knew the value of such services in such county.

4. Account books are admissible in evidence to explain the nature and show the extent of services performed in keeping them.

5. Evidence of another bookkeeper is admissible to show that certain books were not complicated, but a simple set of books, and that any one of ordinary skill in bookkeeping could keep them.

6. Refusal of an instruction limiting the value of services of a bookkeeper, and manager of his employer's business, in his absence, to the "ruling rate of wages" generally paid for similar services, was proper, since there can hardly be a "ruling rate of wages" for such services, because their value depends as much on the capacity and fidelity of the servant, as on the customary wages paid for such work.

7. Refusal of an instruction that the services of one who was employed as bookkeeper, clerk, and salesman, and manager of his employer's business, in his absence, could not in any degree be based on the wages for like services in the county, unless it was shown that the rate of wages elsewhere in the county was the same, was proper, since a comparison might be made even if the wages elsewhere were not the same, which would in some degree tend to show their value at the place performed.

8. A judgment will not be reversed on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it, where the evidence is conflicting.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county.

Action by Charles W. Crusoe against J. A. Clark. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Bledsoe, for appellant. S. N. Reed (C. E. Arnold, of counsel), for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action for work and labor as bookkeeper, salesman, and clerk. Defendant denied any indebtedness, pleaded certain counterclaims, and set up an agreement whereby plaintiff, defendant, and one Shurley entered into a joint enterprise to prospect for mines, in the accomplishment of which plaintiff was to take charge of defendant's mercantile business as clerk, bookkeeper, and salesman without pay, and defendant and Shurley were to do the prospecting, and share equally with plaintiff in any mineral discoveries. The cause was tried by a jury, and plaintiff had a verdict for $564.23. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying new trial.

Certain errors in rejecting the testimony of the witness Shurley are claimed. Some testimony had been given by defendant in support of the agreement pleaded in defense. The alleged agreement was oral, and it was alleged that it was entered into about October 1, 1896. There was no evidence that the three parties to the agreement had met and come to any mutual understanding as to its terms, but it was claimed by defendant that they met in June, 1897, and confirmed the contract. Plaintiff's services were alleged to have been performed between October 21, 1896, and December 15, 1897. Defendant testified that Shurley went with plaintiff and defendant from Bakersfield to Mohave, but that he (defendant) did not introduce Shurley to plaintiff; that Shurley stayed at Mohave about two weeks; was in ill health, and returned to Bakersfield, and returned to the desert about June 20, 1897. Shurley was called as a witness for defendant, and was asked a number of questions as to what was said at a meeting between the three in June, 1897, "referring to certain prospecting that was to be in contemplation by you and Mr. Clark out on the desert." He was asked if he had any conversations with plaintiff and defendant "with regard to prospecting for minerals in that country," and to state the conversations. Several questions were asked him by defendant's counsel, all of which related to the understanding after he returned to the desert. The court properly, we think, sustained the objection made by plaintiff. The agreement pleaded was alleged to have been entered into October 1, 1896. There was no agreement pleaded such as Shurley was asked to testify about, and the testimony was therefore not within the issues presented. It did not tend to corroborate defendant's testimony that the agreement took effect October 1, 1896. For like reason, it was not error to refuse a question asked Shurley for the purpose of contradicting plaintiff, who had denied a conversation with defendant and Shurley "referring to certain prospecting that was to be." A witness cannot be impeached by contradictory statements as to matters irrelevant to the issues.

It was not error to refuse the question put to defendant, Clark, as a witness, "Did Mr. Shurley and Mr. Crusoe understand that Crusoe, Shurley, and yourself were interested in the matter?" and the question, "State whether or not Mr. Crusoe expected any wages from you when he went out there." Clearly, these were questions calling, not for facts, but for the conclusion of the witness, and were inadmissible. It was immaterial how much defendant paid out for expenses in the prospecting venture; there was no issue involving such disbursements.

It is objected that the testimony of witnesses Parks and Munzer as to the value of plaintiff's services was improperly admitted, because they resided at Bakersfield, and admitted that they did not know what the wages for like services were at Garlock or Mohave, where they were rendered, which were places situated in Kern county, remote from Bakersfield. These witnesses were present in court, and heard plaintiff describe the nature and extent of his services. They were business men of experience, and had employed persons for services similar to those performed by plaintiff. They testified that they knew the value of such work in Kern county. We think they fully qualified themselves to testify upon the point at issue.

Defendant offered in evidence the books kept by plaintiff to show the character and amount of bookkeeping done by plaintiff, and the extent of defendant's business. I think this evidence was admissible upon the issue as to the value of the plaintiff's services. It tended to explain the nature and extent of his work. The court had refused to allow defendant to prove the amount of the monthly sales, on the ground that the books were there, and were the best evidence, but when they were offered refused to admit them. This was error. The court also refused to allow the witness Broadwell, who was himself a bookkeeper, to testify, from an examination of the books, that they were not complicated, but a simple set of books to keep, and that any one of ordinary skill in bookkeeping could keep them. We think this evidence was also admissible, as bearing upon the question of the value of plaintiff's services. It does not, however, appear from any statement of counsel or otherwise what the books would have shown, or that their introduction would have furnished evidence material to appellant. It appeared from the offer of Broadwell's testimony that he had examined the books. He testified to the value of plaintiff's services, we must presume, at least in part from this examination. The jury got the benefit to some extent in that way of the rejected evidence. While we think the books ought to have been admitted, and that this witness ought, as an expert bookkeeper, to have been permitted to testify as it was claimed he would, still nothing is shown to enable us to say whether or not the error was prejudicial.

Defendant asked and was refused the following instructions: "That the rule for determining the value of services, in the absence of an express contract therefor, is to ascertain from the evidence the character and kind of work performed, and the rate of wages generally paid in the same neighborhood for the same kind of work;" and that the value of the services must be ascertained "from the testimony as to the ruling rate of wages for similar services paid at" the place of the service (Garlock and Mohave); and that the estimate of value cannot be based upon the "estimate of the value of such services in any degree upon testimony of the rate of wages paid at Bakersfield or elsewhere, unless it is first shown to your satisfaction that the rate of wages at both places was the same." The value of the services of one who is a bookkeeper, clerk, and salesman, and has the care and management of the business, in the absence of his employer, as was the case here, can hardly be determined alone by the rate of wages generally paid for salesmen or clerks. The value of the services would depend much upon the man himself, as to his capacity and fidelity, as well as upon the customary wages paid for this class of work. While the customary wages might be a criterion, it would not be the only one, as the instruction implies. The services in their nature involve trust and confidence, peculiar fitness as a salesman, skill as an accountant, knowledge of the business, and capacity to manage it. There can hardly be a "ruling rate of wages" for employment of this character applicable alike to all persons who might be employed. Nor do we think it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that the value of the services could not, "in any degree" be based upon the wages for like services elsewhere in the county, "unless it was shown that the rate of wages elsewhere in the county was the same." A comparison might be made, even if the wages elsewhere were not the same, which would in some degree tend to show the value of the services at the place where performed. In the present case plaintiff first showed the character and extent of his services, and then proved their value by witnesses who showed by their answers that they were qualified to speak as to the value of the services at the place where performed, and testified that they knew the value and what it was. There was evidence, also, as to what wages were generally paid for such services, and it is to this latter defendant sought to confine the evidence. We do not think it was prejudicial error to refuse the instructions.

Defendant contends that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. Upon this point it is enough to say that the evidence was conflicting, that there was sufficient to support the verdict, and that it was for the jury alone to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PATTON v. BOARD OF HEALTH OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
et al. (S. F. 1,853.)¹

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)
HEALTH OFFICERS—INSPECTORS—REMOVAL.

A health inspector appointed by the board of health of the city of San Francisco, whose duties are to inspect and report concerning premises on which nuisances are situated, and to serve notices for their abatement, is a public officer, within Const. art. 20, § 16, providing that an officer whose term is not fixed by the constitution or declared by law shall hold his position during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment, for a period not exceeding four years; and hence such inspector might properly be removed by the board without notice of charges preferred against him, or opportunity to be heard, though Pol. Code, § 3009, declares that such officers shall not be removed without cause.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action for a writ of mandate by A. T. Patton against the board of health of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, the board appeals. Reversed.

Garret W. McEnerney, for appellants. J. P. Langhorne, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brings this action against the board of health of the city and county of San Francisco for a writ of mandate requiring it to admit plaintiff to the position of health inspector and to approve certain of his demands on the treasury for salary accruing since his removal. The court found as facts: That the board of health appointed plaintiff on August 6, 1895, as one of the six health inspectors provided to be appointed by section 3009, Pol. Code; that the board of health, in its order appointing plaintiff, did not specify or in any manner limit the term for which plaintiff should hold or exercise the position; that plaintiff entered upon the discharge of his duties pursuant to such appointment, and discharged the duties required of him by the board until about November 6, 1896, at which time, and while plaintiff was proceeding to perform his duties, the board passed a resolution purporting by its terms to remove plaintiff from his said position, "but the said resolution was so passed without plaintiff's knowledge or consent, and without any notice to him that any charge whatever had been made against him, or that any charge against him would be heard by said board, * * * and plaintiff had no opportunity to be heard in his own behalf before said board of health or its members before the passage of said resolution." It is further found that solely upon the authority of said resolution plaintiff has been denied his right to be and act as such health inspector, and has been deprived of the emoluments pertaining to said position; that the duties of plaintiff as such inspector, prescribed by the board, were "to inspect premises concerning which complaints have been made to said board, and to report thereon to said board, and to serve notices issued by said board to persons to abate nuisances on their premises." As conclusions of law, the court found that plaintiff has never been legally removed from the position of health inspector, and that he is still one of the six health inspectors appointed by the board of health August 6, 1895, and that "it is not material whether plaintiff was guilty of insolence, insubordination, or neglect, as he had no trial on such charge or charges"; that plaintiff is not an officer or commissioner, within the meaning of section 16, art. 20, of the constitution of this state; and that plaintiff is entitled to the writ, etc. At the trial plaintiff testified: "When I became a health inspector no written commission was issued to me. I took no oath of office, nor filed any bond." Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying new trial, defendant appeals.

Appellant relies principally upon the following proposition: The plaintiff's term of office as health inspector not having been fixed by the constitution or by law, he held at the pleasure of the appointing power; and that portion of section 3009 of the Political Code prohibiting his removal without just cause is unconstitutional and void, because in violation of section 16, art. 20, Const. This provision of the constitution reads as follows: "When the term of any officer or commissioner is not provided for in this constitution, the term may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such officer or commissioner shall hold his position as such officer or commissioner during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment; but in no case shall such term exceed four years." It is conceded that the term of the position of health inspector is not prescribed either in the constitution or by any law. Section 3009, Pol. Code, contains the following among other provisions: "The board of health must appoint * * * six health inspectors * * * whose duties must be fixed by the board of health. * * * The appointing power aforesaid is vested solely in said board of health, and said board shall have power to prescribe the duties of said appointees [referring to health inspectors and many other appointees], and shall not remove the same without just cause." It cannot be doubted that the legislature may authorize the employment of persons to perform certain duties in their nature public, to be prescribed by the authority making the appointment of such persons, and may provide in the law that such persons shall not be removed without just cause, if the employment is not an office, within the meaning of the constitution; and it is well settled that, under such a clause in the statute, the appointee is entitled to notice and opportunity to be heard before he can be legally removed. Kennedy v. Board, 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. 1042; Marion v. Board, 97 Cal. 608, 32 Pac. 643, 20 L. R. A. 197; Fairchild v. Board, 107 Cal. 92, 40 Pac. 26.

With the policy of such a law we have nothing to do; its wisdom or unwisdom is for the legislature alone to determine. We are only concerned, in the present case, with the question, is the health inspector an "officer," within the meaning of the provision of the constitution above quoted? Many of the cases and authors giving definitions of the word "office" and "officer," as used in statutes and constitutions, will be found cited in chapter 1, Mechem, Pub. Off. Counsel in their briefs have called attention to some others. I do not think it possible from this mass of learning to deduce a definition universally applicable, although nearly every conceivable case has arisen and has been passed upon. It seems to be agreed by all writers that certain things are requisite to make a given employment a public office and its incumbent a public officer. Then there are numerous criteria which, while not in themselves conclusive, are yet held to indicate more or less strongly the legislative intent to create or not to create an office. One of the requisites is that the office itself must be created by the constitution of the state or it must be authorized by some statute. The section of the constitution in question embraces all classes of officers, statutory as well as constitutional. People v. Perry, 79 Cal. 105, 21 Pac. 423. But not all employments authorized by law are public offices, in the sense of the constitution. The presidency of a private corporation may be spoken of as an office. An executor, guardian, a referee for the decision and trial of an action, are all officers who derive their existence from statutes, but they are not public officers in the constitutional sense. "Their authority is restricted to specific matters, and no general powers are conferred upon them authorizing to act in respect of all cases, or in any case or matter, other than specified and named in their appointment. They owe no duty to the public, and could perform no service for the public. * * * 'Public office,' as used in the constitution, has respect to a permanent trust to be exercised in behalf of the government, or of all citizens who may need the intervention of a public functionary or officer, and in all matters within the range of the duties pertaining to the character of the trust. It means a right to exercise generally, and in all proper cases, the functions of a public trust or employment, and to receive the fees and emoluments belonging to it, and to hold the place and perform the duty for the term and by the tenure prescribed by law." In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238. Danforth, J., in Rowland v. Mayor, etc., 83 N. Y. 376, said: "Whoever has a public charge or employment, or even a particular employment affecting the public, is said to hold or to be in office." Platt, J., in Re Oaths, 20 Johns. 492, speaks of "office" as "an employment on behalf of the government in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental." Pearson, C. J., in State v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, said: "A public office is an agency for the state, and the person whose duty it is to perform this agency is a public officer. * * * The essence of it is, the duty of performing an agency; that is, of doing some act or acts, or series of acts, for the state." It has hence been held by most courts, as was said in the opinion of the judges given to the governor, reported in appendix to 3 Me. p. 481: "The term 'office' implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to, and possession of it by, the person filling the office; and the exercise of such power, within legal limits, constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such office." The opinion proceeds to further point out the distinction between an office and an employment under the government. "The power thus delegated and possessed may be a portion belonging to some one of the three great departments, and sometimes to another; still it is a legal power, which may be rightfully exercised, and in its effects it will bind the rights of others, and be subject to revision and correction only according to the standing laws of the state. An employment merely has none of these distinguishing features. A public agent acts only on behalf of his principal, the public, whose sanction is generally considered as necessary to give the acts performed the authority and power of a public act or law. And, if the act be such as not to require such subsequent sanction, still it is only a species of service performed under the public authority and for the public good, but not in the execution of any standing laws, which are considered as the rules of action and the guardians of rights." In U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747, Chief Justice Marshall, in determining that the "agent of fortifications" is an officer of the United States, said: "An 'office' is defined to be 'a public charge or employment,' and he who performs the duties of the office is an officer. * * * Although an office is 'an employment,' it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to do an act or perform a service without becoming an officer. But if the duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rules prescribed by the government, and not by contract, which an individual is appointed by government to perform, who enters on the duties appertaining to the station without any contract defining them; if those duties continue, though the person be changed, —it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer. If it may be converted into a contract, it must be a contract to perform the duties of the office of agent of fortifications, and such an office must exist with ascertained duties, or there is no standard by which the extent of the condition can be measured." Judge Cooley distinguished the "officer" from the "employé" in the "greater importance, dignity, and independence of his position; in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond; in the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or nonfeasance in office; and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of the position." People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673. But it has been held that an oath of office is not a necessary criterion, nor is salary. These are but incidents, and form no part of the office, though they may aid in determining the nature of the position. Duration or continuance have been said to be embraced in the term "office," and Chief Justice Marshall, in the case cited, spoke of the duty being a continuing one as an important element. But Chief Justice Pearson, in the North Carolina case cited, said "that it made no difference whether there be but one act or a series of acts to be done,—whether the office expires as soon as the one act is done, or is to be held for years or during good behavior,"—the service being performed for the state. Our court at an early day, in Vaughn v. English, 8 Cal. 40, held that the clerks in the offices of secretary of state and comptroller and treasurer of state were "officers," within the meaning of the act of April 21, 1856 (St. 1856, p. 224). It was there said: "The term 'officer,' in its common acceptation, is sufficiently comprehensive to include all persons in any public station or employment conferred by government." The definition given in 4 Jacob, Law Dict. 433, was quoted as follows: "It is said every man is a public officer who hath any duty concerning the public, and he is not the less a public officer where his authority is confined to narrow limits, because it is the duty of his office and the nature of that duty which makes him a public officer, and not the extent of his authority." The opinion continues: "The respondent was appointed by government; the duties which he is to perform concern the public, and he is paid out of the public treasury; he is therefore a public officer." It was held that because there was no definite term of the office could not be urged as an objection, for the clerks are appointed for the term of the officer making the appointment, subject to the power of removal. It was held in U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482, that civil surgeons appointed by the commissioner of pensions are not officers of the United States, because they are not appointed by a head of a department, nor are the appointments approved by such head, and this distinguished the case from U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 385, 18 L. Ed. 830, where it was held that a clerk in the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States is an "officer," within the meaning of the act of congress of June 14, 1866 (14 Stat. 65), punishing embezzlement. It was there said: "An 'office' is a public station or employment, conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties. The employment of defendant was in the public service of the United States. He was appointed pursuant to law, and his compensation was fixed by law. Vacating the office of his superior would not have affected the tenure of his place. His duties were continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary." In the case of Bunn v. People (1867) 45 Ill. 397, the cases were very fully examined, and the conclusion reached that the commissioners appointed under an act of the legislature to superintend the construction of the state house were not officers, within the meaning of the constitution, but were agents or employes for a single and special purpose, whose functions ceased upon the completion of the work. The question was subsequently regarded in that state of sufficient importance to call for a constitutional definition, and hence in 1870 the constitution ordained the following: "An office is a public position created by the constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power or for a fixed term, with a successor elected or appointed. An employment is an agency for a temporary purpose, which ceases when that purpose is accomplished." Const. Ill. 1870, art. 5, § 24. Somewhat in line with the Illinois case last above cited is the case of McDaniel v. Yuba Co., 14 Cal. 444, where it was held that the examining physician of the county hospital was not an officer, but an employe, to be paid under the terms of his contract, though his services were rendered in a capacity in the nature of a public office or appointment. And so it was held recently in White v. City of Alameda, 124 Cal. 95, 56 Pac. 795, that the position of driver of a street wagon, with a salary fixed by the board of trustees, was not an office, but a mere employment, held at the pleasure of the board. In the case of Quigg v. Evans, 121 Cal. 546, 53 Pac. 1093, the question was whether the harbor master of the port of Eureka was an officer, within the meaning of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution, which reads: "When an office from any cause becomes vacant, and no mode is provided by law for filling such vacancy," the governor may appoint, etc. The act creating the position reads: "The town marshal of Eureka is the harbor master of the port of Eureka," etc. St. 1869-70, p. 745, § 4. By the act he was to enforce the rules and regulations of the harbor commissioners, and his compensation was to be fixed by them. It was held that the office of harbor master was created, and that when, by the adoption of a new charter, the city of Eureka no longer had a town marshal, there existed a vacancy in the office which the governor could fill. Illustrations might be multiplied, but it would only emphasize what must already be apparent, that the definitions of the term "office," while not inaccurate, taken in a general sense, are quite inadequate when applied to particular cases. An examination of adjudicated cases will show that the disagreement among judges has not been so much as to definitions, as in their application to the circumstances of each particular case.

Turning to the statute, we find that it is made the duty of the board of health to appoint a large number of persons to various positions therein named, of greater or less importance (Pol. Code, § 3009), among which are six health inspectors. In every case "the duties must be fixed by the board of health," except in the single instance of the two police surgeons, who, in addition to the duties to be prescribed by the board, "shall make all autopsies required of them by the coroner." Certain "medical attendants" and "employes" are to be paid such compensation as the board shall fix, but most of the appointees named are to be paid salaries fixed by section 3010 of the Political Code, while others are to be paid such sums as may be authorized by law: "Health inspectors, twelve hundred dollars each." It seems to be reasonably well settled that where the legislature creates the position, prescribes the duties, and fixes the compensation, and these duties pertain to the public, and are continuing and permanent, not occasional or temporary, such position or employment is an office, and he who occupies it is an officer. In such a case, there is an unmistakable declaration by the legislature that some portion, great or small, of the sovereign functions of government are to be exercised for the benefit of the public, and the legislature has decided for itself that the employment is of sufficient dignity and importance to be deemed to be an office.

It is only where the legislature has delegated its power to create the office, and to prescribe the duties and compensation, that differences of opinion have arisen in the courts. Without attempting a reconciliation of these differences, it appears that the legislature in the present case has created the office and has fixed the salary attaching to it; the employment is a continuing one, and not transient, occasional, or incidental; and its incumbent would remain in office should the officers of the board of health cease to act as such, and the office of health inspectors would continue if the incumbents were removed or for any cause ceased to act. The health inspector is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of government to be exercised for the benefit of the public. His duties are not prescribed by contract, but are defined by the government through the board of health, and we find in the employment all the elements mentioned in the Hartwell Case, supra, viz. tenure, duration, emoluments, duties, and a compensation fixed by law. The element of duties to be performed involved in the creation of an office, under all definitions and under most of the decisions, was not directly determined by the legislature; to the board was delegated the power to prescribe the duties. But many cases hold, we think properly, that an employment may be none the less an office, although the duties are to be prescribed by a superior officer. "The board of health have general supervision of all matters appertaining to the sanitary condition of the city and county," etc. Pol. Code, § 3012. Their powers and duties are large and important, and the statute authorizes the board to devolve upon the health inspectors such portion of these powers and duties as the board may deem best for the good of the public service. So far as the evidence shows, the duties thus delegated to the inspectors are not extensive, but they cannot be said to be unimportant or purely ministerial, or lacking in the requirements of judgment and discretion, and the board may at any time enlarge them. It is difficult to take this case out of the rules which governed the case of Quigg v. Evans, supra; or the case of U. S. v. Hartwell, supra; or U. S. v. Maurice, supra; or the principles laid down in the opinion of the judges reported in 3 Me. supra; or to distinguish it from Vaughn v. English, supra. In the case of Kennedy v. Board, supra, it was conceded by both parties, and assumed by the court in the majority opinion, that the position of teacher in the public schools of the city and county of San Francisco is not an office, and hence that case cannot aid us in reaching a decision here. Our conclusion is that the intention of the legislature was to make the health inspectors "officers," within the meaning of the constitution, and, having failed to declare the term of the office, they hold during the pleasure of the board of health. People v. Perry, supra; Same v. Hill, 7 Cal. 97; Smith v. Brown, 59 Cal. 672. It is advised that the judgment be reversed, with directions to dismiss the writ.

We concur: COOPER, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the writ.

ASHTON et al. v. HEYDENFELDT.

(S. F. 1,580.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1900.)

EXECUTORS—DISTRIBUTION—RESTITUTION—REVERSAL OF DECREE.

Executors can maintain an action against a devisee for the restitution of property constituting assets of the estate delivered over by them under a decree of distribution subsequently reversed, though such property was not "actually delivered," but was used by them, with the consent and under the direction of the legatee, to discharge her debts.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles Ashton and another, as executors of Solomon Heydenfeldt, against Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Knight & Heggerty and Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. Evans & Meredith and Lester H. Jacobs, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Appellant is the residuary legatee under the will of her late husband, Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased. On October 23, 1893, the final account of the respondents having been settled, a decree of distribution was entered, which, after directing the executors to pay to certain persons named in the decree certain specified sums, directed them to pay the remainder of the money in their hands, amounting to the sum of $18,665.89, to appellant. This sum, excepting a few hundred dollars, was then on deposit in a savings bank to the credit of the estate. The court found "that pursuant to said decree said executors paid to said Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, the defendant herein, the said sum of $18,665.89; that thereafter it was determined by the supreme court, and this court finds the fact to be, that the sum of ten thousand three hundred and seventy dollars of said amount so paid to said Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt was not a part of the assets of said estate, but was the proceeds of an insurance upon the life of said Solomon Heydenfeldt, deceased, payable by its terms to Catharine, wife of said Solomon Heydenfeldt, or to any wife that may survive him, and minor children living at the time of his death; that the remainder of the money so paid to the defendant, to wit, the sum of $8,295.89, consisted entirely of assets of said estate." The court further found that on March 15, 1895, said decree of distribution was reversed by this court (106 Cal. 434, 39 Pac. 788), and the matter of the distribution of said estate was remanded to the superior court for a further hearing; that no further hearing has been had, and no other order or decree of distribution made; and that repayment was demanded by the plaintiffs. The cause was tried, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $8,295.89. This appeal is from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, based upon the ground that certain of the findings are not justified by the evidence.

The evidence on the part of the plaintiffs was, in substance, that, after the payment of specific sums directed by the decree to be paid to other parties, there remained said sum of $18,665.89, to which appellant was entitled under the decree; that at that time she was indebted to her counsel, Messrs. Knight & Heggerty, in the sum of $5,000, and to Pierson & Mitchell, also her counsel, in the sum of $2,000; that she was also indebted to Julius Jacobs, one of the plaintiffs, in the sum of $3,781.51, and to Ashton & Gardiner, real-estate agents, in the sum of $7,052,—the indebtedness to Jacobs being for money lent and advanced to her, and to Ashton & Gardiner for advancements and services connected with her real estate; the last two items being secured by a mortgage executed by appellant to Mr. Ashton. On October 26th Mrs. Heydenfeldt and her attorneys and the executors and their attorneys met, and Mrs. Heydenfeldt directed the executors to pay to her said attorneys the said sums due to them, and to discharge her said debts due to Jacobs and to Ashton & Gardiner, respectively. As the bank was not at that time paying deposits, except upon the notice required by its rules, it was agreed between the parties and the bank that a bank book should be issued to each of these creditors for the amount respectively due to each, and this was done, a book being issued to appellant for the remainder; and she thereupon executed and delivered to the executors her receipt acknowledging that she received from them "$18,665.89, the residue of the cash on hand in the hands of the executors as shown by their final account, and distributed to me [her] under the decree of distribution entered in the above-entitled action," and Ashton released the mortgage he held as security for her indebtedness to Ashton & Gardiner and to Jacobs. The transaction as above stated was not controverted by defendant, except that testimony was given tending to show that there was no settlement of the amounts due to Jacobs and to Ashton & Gardiner on their personal accounts, but that the receipt was given to facilitate the closing of the estate. We think, however, that the evidence fully sustains the conclusion that there was a full settlement of these accounts, and that they were paid with the consent and by the direction of appellant in the manner above stated. If the bank had failed, the loss would undoubtedly have fallen upon those who had accepted bank books, and thus became depositors. Nor could one be well led to believe that the mortgage securing these demands would have been canceled, if the transaction was not regarded by both parties as a full and unqualified settlement and payment. The argument on behalf of appellant is, however, mainly upon a question of law. Appellant concedes the right of an executor to maintain an action for property delivered over to a devisee or legatee pursuant to a decree of distribution subsequently reversed, but it is contended that this right is strictly confined to property constituting assets of the estate "actually delivered" under the decree. If, as we have seen, the money was used, with her consent and under her direction, to discharge her personal debt, and relieve her land from the incumbrance of a mortgage given to secure it, the law will not permit her to say that, as she did not actually receive the money in her hand, she did not receive it at all.

It is further contended on behalf of the appellant that "even if she had actually received the money, and then paid it over to respondents in settlement of her indebtedness to them, * * * knowing, as they must be deemed to know, that the decree was subject to appeal and reversal, they, and not she, would be liable for restitution to the estate, as for so much money had and received, and would be chargeable accordingly in the probate proceedings, in the event of a reversal of the decree." If this proposition is sound, it is difficult to perceive why the $5,000 paid at the same time and in the same manner to her counsel who procured the decree of distribution, and now represent her on this appeal, should not be refunded to the executors. It is well settled that the judgment plaintiff who enforces the judgment is charged with the duty of making restitution to the defendant of whatever was received on the judgment, if the judgment be afterwards reversed. This the appellant concedes; but her contention above stated is, in effect, that the executors against whom a decree of distribution is rendered, and who comply with the command of the court before the time limited for taking an appeal has expired, do so at their peril, for the reason that they must be deemed to have known that an appeal might be taken. The case of Langley v. Warner, 3 N. Y. 327, is directly in point. In that case Walsh recovered a judgment against Langley in a prior action in which Warner, the defendant, was Walsh's attorney. Walsh agreed with his attorney, Warner, that he might retain the amount collected from Langley on execution, and credit it on an indebtedness due from Walsh to Warner. The money was collected, and the credit given. The judgment was afterwards reversed, and Langley, the defendant in the first action, from whom the money had been collected, brought the action against Warner to recover the money received by him under the circumstances above stated. The court, by Bronson, C. J., said: "It was the same thing, in effect, as though the defendant had first paid over the money to Walsh, and the latter had then repaid it to the defendant in satisfaction of his debt. About two months afterwards the judgment was reversed, and restitution was awarded to the plaintiffs against Walsh. It was very proper that he should make restitution, for he had in effect received the money and applied it to the payment of his debt. The plaintiffs proceeded to execution against Walsh in pursuance of the judgment for restitution, but, failing in that, they now seek to recover the amount from the defendant. I see no principle on which the action can be maintained. The defendant has got none of the plaintiff's money. He has got nothing but his own. Walsh had a perfect title to the money when it was collected, just as perfect as it would have been if no certiorari had been issued. He had a right to do what he pleased with the money, and he made a very proper use of it by paying his debt. The plaintiffs have taken up the strange notion that, because they were trying to get the judgment reversed, Walsh could not give a good title to the money, especially if he paid it to one who knew what they were doing. I am not aware of any foundation for such a doctrine. As Walsh had a good title to the money, he could, of course, give a good title to the defendant or any one else. No one was bound to presume that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction was erroneous, and would be reversed. The legal presumption was the other way,—that the judgment was right, and would be affirmed. But, if the judgment had been known to be erroneous, the pendency of the proceedings in error could not affect in the least degree the title of Walsh to the money. Nothing short of a reversal of the judgment could destroy or impair his right." In Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 8, 8 L. Ed. 299, it was said: "It is a settled rule of law that upon an erroneous judgment, if there be a regular execution, the party may justify under it until the judgment is reversed; for an erroneous judgment is the act of the court. * * * A contrary doctrine would be extremely inconvenient, and in a great measure tie up proceedings under a judgment during the whole time within which a writ of error might be brought." Appellant cites, upon the point now under consideration, Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 681, 682; Ex parte Morris, 9 Wall. 605, 19 L. Ed. 799; Marks v. Cowles, 61 Ala. 299, 303; and 2 Perry, Trusts, § 827. None of these authorities are inconsistent with Langley v. Warner or Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, supra, though Ex parte Morris appears, upon a casual reading, to be so. The court said: "If Smith, the district attorney, received from McCrosky any part of the fund ordered to be paid to the latter, the rights of the petitioners followed the money into his hands, and he is liable for it." The proceeding was against certain bales of cotton, the property of the petitioners, under which they were forfeited to the United States and sold, and the proceeds distributed, 5 per cent. to the district attorney, and other parts to other officers, and one-half the remainder to McCrosky, the informer. It was offered to be shown that Smith "had received a large part of the money paid to the informer," who was out of the state. Under the circumstances the word "received" implies a gift or voluntary deposit without consideration, and not the payment of a prior obligation. It would be very strange, if the court meant what appellant seems to think was meant by the language quoted, that no reference was made by the court to Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Washington, supra, which is wholly inconsistent with appellant's interpretation of Ex parte Morris. Finding no error in the record, the order appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MOONEY. (Cr. 576.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

ARSON—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY—INTENT.

Under Pen. Code, § 447, defining arson as "the willful and malicious burning of a building with intent to destroy it," an information alleging that the accused "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously" set fire to, and caused to be burned, a certain building described, without averring any "intent to destroy it," charges no offense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Merced county.

K. J. Mooney, convicted of arson, appeals. Reversed.

James F. Peck and Frank H. Farrar, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

GRAY, C. The defendant appeals from a judgment convicting him of the crime of arson in the second degree, from an order denying him a new trial, and from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

Section 447 of the Penal Code defines arson as "the willful and malicious burning of a building, with intent to destroy it." The defendant was charged in the information with "the crime of arson, committed as follows: The said K. J. Mooney on or about the 4th day of March, 1899, at and in the said county of Merced, and state of California, and prior to the filing of this information, did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously set fire to and cause to be burned a certain building occupied and used by said Mooney as a notion store, and situated on Main street, in the city of Merced," etc. It will be seen that one important element of the crime of arson, as defined in the Code, is the "intent to destroy." The words quoted are a part of the description of the crime of arson, and there can be no such crime in the absence of this intent to destroy. It is therefore necessary that this essential element should be averred in the information, either in the language of the statute or in some other way, so as to make it clearly appear that the defendant had this specific intent and purpose, and that the building was burned by him to carry such intent and purpose into execution. The words "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously" were properly used in the information, but they are not sufficient. Such words import only that criminal intent which is a necessary part of every felony or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific purpose to destroy the building which is an element of the crime of arson. "Whether the indictment is on a statute or at the common law, it is a rule, universal and without exception, that every intent, like everything else which the law has made an element of the offense, must be alleged; for otherwise no prima facie case appears." 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 523. It has been held by this court in a burglary case that the information charging that the intent of the defendant in entering the building was to commit the crime of felony, without stating what particular felony, does not state the offense of burglary. People v. Nelson, 58 Cal. 104. In another case the indictment was for perjury, and it was held to be just as necessary to allege therein "that the affidavit was delivered with the intent that it be uttered and published as true, as to charge that the affidavit was made by the accused, or that it was false," and that for want of such allegation the information charged no crime. People v. Robles, 117 Cal. 681, 49 Pac. 1042. There is nothing in People v. Wooley, 44 Cal. 494, in conflict with the principle laid down in the other cases cited above. The question involved here was not raised or discussed in People v. Wooley. The recent case of People v. Fong Hong, 120 Cal. 635, 53 Pac. 265, cites with approval an instruction of the trial court which accurately sets forth the elements of the crime of arson. It is clear to us that the information in this case does not allege sufficient facts to constitute the crime of arson, and this makes it unnecessary to discuss the other points urged on appeal. The judgment and orders appealed from should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and orders appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

WILLIAMS v. RIEHL et al. (Sac. 711.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETIES — ASSIGNMENT — EXECUTION AGAINST CO-SURETIES — CONTRIBUTION — TRANSFER OF PROPERTY BY PRINCIPAL — EFFECT—SUBROGATION—SURETY'S LIABILITY—EXTENT.

1. Where a judgment creditor assigned the judgment against the principal and sureties on a bond to certain of the sureties, authorizing them to enforce it in his name, the assignees, on filing the assignment with the clerk, were entitled to execution against a co-surety to enforce contribution, though they had filed no notice of payment of the judgment nor claim for contribution, and no entry of such notice had been made by the clerk in his docket, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 709, authorizing the enforcement of contribution between sureties on filing and entry of such notice, since such section does not apply to the assignment of judgments.

2. Where certain sureties procured an assignment of a judgment recovered against them and their principal on an indemnity bond on payment of the judgment, such payment did not amount to a satisfaction of the judgment, so as to prevent them from obtaining contribution from co-sureties, or to recover thereon against the principal.

3. Where, after a judgment against sureties on an indemnity bond had been recovered, the fact that the principal assigned property to certain of the sureties who paid the judgment did not prevent them from obtaining contribution from other sureties, since they were only entitled to an accounting of the proceeds of the property transferred after it had been sold.

4. Where certain sureties procured an assignment of the judgment against them for less than the amount thereof, they became subrogated to the rights of their assignor only for the purpose of compelling payment from the principal, or contribution from the sureties for an aliquot part of the amount paid for the assignment in proportion to the amount for which all the sureties were liable, in the absence of proof that any of them were insolvent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Action by A. L. Williams, administrator, etc., against P. G. Riehl, Patrick Kelly, and others, to recover on an indemnity bond. The judgment recovered against defendants was assigned by plaintiff to defendants Johnston, Smith, and Lufkin, on which execution was issued against defendant Kelly, whereupon he moved to recall and quash the writ, and for an order directing satisfaction of the judgment, and from an order denying such motion he appeals. Modified.

James B. Devine, for appellant. A. J. Hull, Thos. Watt, Grove L. Johnson, W. M. Sims, and Albert M. Johnson, for respondents.

COOPER, C. The defendant Riehl was the guardian of the estate of one Carver, a minor, and as such guardian executed a bond, as required by the order of the court in which the proceedings were pending, in the penal sum of $25,000, with the following named sureties for amounts named, respectively, to wit, F. S. Smith, for $25,000; George Peters, $5,000; William Johnston, $5,000; Stanton Myers, $5,000; Jacob Gebert, $5,000; D. T. Lufkin, $5,000; and Patrick Kelly, $5,000. Carver died, and plaintiff was appointed and qualified as administrator of his estate. The final account of defendant Riehl as such guardian was regularly settled, and it was ascertained by the court that he had in his hands belonging to his ward the sum of $10,000, with interest, which amount he was directed to pay. The amount not having been paid, the plaintiff brought this action against the defendant Riehl and the other defendants who are sureties on his bond, and on the 11th day of March, 1898, the plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant Riehl, the guardian, in the sum of $10,267, and against defendant Smith in the same amount, and against the other defendants in the sum of $5,000 each. The plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of said Carver, and by permission of the court in which the estate was pending, agreed to accept $9,500 in full payment of his judgment, and the amount was paid to plaintiff on the 27th day of April, 1898, by defendants Johnston, Smith, and Lufkin, and at their request the plaintiff executed and delivered to them a written assignment of the judgment authorizing them to enforce the same in the name of the plaintiff as such administrator. This assignment was filed with the clerk of the court, and with the papers in this action. After the said assignment was filed, the defendants, who paid the judgment, and to whom the said assignment was made, applied to the clerk, and the clerk issued a writ of execution directed to the sheriff of Sacramento county commanding him to levy upon the property of the defendant Kelly, and cause to be made out of the same the sum of $5,000, besides interest and costs. The sheriff to whom the writ was directed proceeded to levy upon the property of defendant Kelly, and noticed the same for sale. Kelly, after giving notice, moved the court below to recall and quash the writ of execution, and for an order directing satisfaction of the judgment to be entered. The court denied the motion, and refused to make the order. The court further ordered that the writ of execution be amended so as to run against Kelly for $1,875 only. The defendant Kelly has appealed from the order so made and from the order refusing to recall the execution.

1. It is claimed by appellant that the defendants Smith, Johnston, and Lufkin, who will hereafter be called the "respondents," having failed to comply with the provisions of section 709, Code Civ. Proc., cannot proceed under the judgment by obtaining an execution thereon to enforce contribution from him. The section is as follows: "When property, liable to an execution against several persons, is sold thereon, and more than a due proportion of the judgment is satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale of the property of one of them, or one of them pays, without a sale, more than his proportion, he may compel contribution from the others; and when a judgment is against several, and is upon an obligation of one of them, as security for another, and the surety pays the amount, or any part thereof, either by sale of his property or before sale, he may compel repayment from the principal; in such case the person so paying or contributing is entitled to the benefit of the judgment, to enforce contribution or repayment, if, within ten days after his payment, he file with the clerk of the court where the judgment was rendered notice of his payment and claim to contribution or repayment. Upon a filing of such notice the clerk must make an entry thereof in the margin of the docket." Respondents do not claim to have complied with said section as to filing with the clerk of the court the notice as therein provided, or as to having an entry made in the margin of the docket; but they claim that, independent of said section, by virtue of the written assignment to them of the judgment, they have the right to an execution to enforce contribution from the appellant. We think the contention of respondents as to this point correct. The section is somewhat obscure, and the first part of it, down to the word "principal," only lays down fundamental rules as to the rights of sureties and joint judgment debtors to compel contribution. The latter part of the section, "in such case the person so paying or contributing is entitled to the benefit of the judgment to enforce contribution or repayment, if within ten days," etc., is the portion that contemplates giving to sureties or joint judgment debtors the right to an execution in the original proceedings. The section was no doubt enacted for the benefit of sureties and joint judgment debtors, in order to enable them, without bringing an action, to use the judgment and the writs of the court for the purpose of compelling, in the case of sureties, the repayment from their principal, or contribution from co-sureties, and, in case of joint judgment debtors, contribution from their co-debtors. The legislature evidently did not have in mind a case where the parties paying the judgment procured a written assignment of it. The plaintiff, being the owner of the judgment, had the right to assign it to any one upon payment of the amount authorized by the order of the court in which the estate was pending. The fact that the parties paying it were some of the judgment debtors would not prevent them from taking an assignment of it. The section is substantially the same and in almost the exact words of section 480 of the Civil Code of Kansas. The supreme court of that state, in Harris v. Frank, 29 Kan. 203, has placed a similar construction upon section 480 of its Code. In the opinion it is said: "Besides, said section 480 of the Civil Code was not enacted for the purpose of giving assignees of judgments a remedy as assignees. They have a remedy independent of such section, and could enforce their judgment if such section had never been enacted. Said section was really enacted for the benefit of sureties, and for the benefit of joint judgment debtors, without reference to whether any assignment had been made or not." The cases of Davis v. Heimbach, 75 Cal. 261, 17 Pac. 199, and Clark v. Austin, 96 Cal. 283, 31 Pac. 293, are not in conflict with what has here been said. In neither case was there any assignment of the judgment to the parties seeking to enforce contribution.

2. The payment of the judgment by respondents to plaintiff did not amount to a satisfaction of the same as against their co-sureties or the principal. The rule is that the mere payment of a judgment by one joint debtor does not operate as an accord and satisfaction of the judgment as to other joint judgment debtors, unless it plainly appears that the payment was intended to have such effect. 1 Brandt, Sur. § 275; Brown v. White (N. J.) 80 Am. Dec. 226; Coffee v. Tevis, 17 Cal. 239; Freem. Ex'ns, § 444.

3. The affidavit of appellant used on the motion states on information and belief that prior to the issuance of the execution the defendant Riehl transferred to respondents real and personal property of the value of $5,000, which they had and held in their possession at the time of the hearing of the motion. It is further stated in the affidavit on information and belief that the said real and personal property was so transferred in part payment of the $9,500, but it is not stated as to whether any price was agreed upon, or as to the amount of the $9,500 the transfer would pay. We must, therefore, from the record, presume that the transfer was of real and personal property, to be held as indemnity to the extent of its value. There is a sharp conflict in the authorities as to whether a surety holding in his hands indemnity can maintain an action against his co-surety, regardless of the indemnity. Many authorities hold that the surety may maintain an action against his co-surety for the sum he is then entitled to, regardless of the indemnity; that in such case, whatever may be afterwards received by a sale of the indemnity shall be accounted for, and proportionately paid to the sureties. On the other hand, it has been held in several cases that the surety so indemnified must save himself harmless, or fully account for the value of the indemnity, before he can recover against his co-surety in an action for contribution. The question does not appear to have been decided by this court, and we are at liberty to lay down the rule in this case. We think the first the better rule. Equality is equity. The moment one co-surety or joint judgment debtor pays the debt of his principal, he has a right to recover from his co-surety or joint judgment debtor his proportionate share. The law gives him this right, and also imposes upon his co-surety the duty of paying his proportionate share. The obligation is as binding upon the co-surety as if created by promissory note or contract. It would be no defense for a defendant, when sued upon a promissory note or other written contract, to set up that the plaintiff held collateral securities or property for the purpose of indemnifying himself. Why should it be a defense in this kind of an action? Why should the plaintiff, in an action for contribution, after having paid out his money, be compelled to wait until he can realize upon some collateral indemnity, which may require years, while his co-surety, who was as much bound in law and morals as himself by the bond, has paid nothing? This would not make the burdens of the co-sureties equal. The indemnity is for the benefit of one co-surety as much as for the other, no matter which holds it. Civ. Code, § 2849. Either one could apply to the court for its sale, or to enjoin a wrongful disposition of it. The burden of finding a market for it, and applying its value towards the debt of the principal, should be borne by one as well as the other. There is no reason why the co-surety who has paid the debt of his principal should assume the burden of disposing of the indemnity, and the additional burden of waiting until it is disposed of, before he can receive from his co-surety his proportion. The views we have here given are supported by the following authorities: 1 Brandt, Sur. § 274; Paulin v. Kaighn, 29 N. J. 483; Anthony v. Percifull, 8 Ark. 495; Bachelder v. Fiske, 17 Mass. 464; Johnson's Adm'rs v. Vaughn, 65 Ill. 425.

4. Appellant contends that the execution as modified was for too great a sum, and in this we think he is correct. The respondents, by paying the plaintiff, and taking an assignment of the judgment, only became entitled to use it for the purpose of enforcing contribution from their co-sureties or payment from their principal. They were only subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff for the purpose of using the judgment in order to protect themselves and their co-sureties, and for the purpose of compelling contribution. This is not a proceeding in equity, and no claim is made that any co-surety is insolvent. The law presumes that they are solvent. Respondents, therefore, were entitled to execution against appellant for an aliquot part of the debt, based on the whole number of co-sureties. They are liable to contribute in the proportion of the respective amounts or penalties for which they became surety. 1 Brandt, Sur. § 288; Armitage v. Pulver, 37 N. Y. 499; notes to Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. pt. 1, p. 124 et seq.; Cowell v. Edwards, 2 Bos. & P. 268. Applying this rule, the appellant was responsible for one-eleventh of the $9,500, which is $863.63. If the other sureties are insolvent, or if any one of them is insolvent, the respondents can bring their action for contribution, and all matters can be determined so that justice will be done, and the burden equally placed upon the solvent sureties. We advise that the court below be directed to amend and modify its order so that it direct the writ of execution to run against appellant for $863.63, and interest at the legal rate since the 27th day of April, 1898, and for costs, and that, as so amended and modified, it be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the court below is directed to amend and modify its order so that it direct the writ of execution to run against appellant for $863.63, and interest at the legal rate since the 27th day of April, 1898, and for costs, and that, as so amended and modified, it is affirmed.

CADENASSO et al. v. ANTONELLE et al.
(S. F. 1,997.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)
BONDS—CONDITION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY —PARTNERSHIP—AGREEMENT TO SHARE PROFITS.

1. Evidence that plaintiff "advanced money" to a contractor will not support a finding that he furnished "labor and material," within the condition of the contractor's bond, obligating his sureties to pay in full "all persons who perform labor or furnish material" to the contractor.

2. That a contractor assigned his contract to parties who advanced money to him, under an agreement to divide profits for the use of the money advanced, does not constitute a partnership between the contractor and the lenders.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by E. Cadenasso and another against J. S. Antonelle and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, part of defendants appeal. Reversed.

A. Everett Ball, for appellants. J. K. Ross, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The complaint states, in substance: That on the 1st day of November, 1895, the defendant Antonelle entered into a contract with one Perry and others, under the terms of which Antonelle was to build a tunnel in the Butte Basin Gravel mine, situated in Amador county, within the time and for the consideration named in a written contract made by said parties. Antonelle gave to said Perry and others an undertaking, with defendants Turner and Vermeil as sureties, conditioned that said Antonelle would faithfully perform the said contract, and construct the said tunnel as he had agreed to do. The said undertaking contained the following conditions: "We further agree that all persons who perform labor or furnish materials to the parties of the second part in said contract, or any person acting for them or by their authority, upon or in connection with the said contract, shall be paid in full for such labor and material; and we do hereby jointly and severally guaranty to all such persons the payment in full of all their claims, and hold ourselves responsible to them in the sum of three thousand dollars, or as much as may be necessary of the said sum, to pay them in full for all labor and materials furnished for said parties of the second part under said contract, or for any person acting for them or by their authority. This bond is intended to inure to the benefit of the parties of the first part in the above contract, and also to the benefit of all persons who perform labor or furnish materials for the parties of the second part in said contract, or for any person acting for them or by their authority. Witness our hands and seals this 1st day of November, 1895. A. D. Turner. J. L. Vermeil." That after the said contract was made, and said undertaking given, the said Antonelle in due time entered upon the construction of the said tunnel in accordance with the said contract. "That the plaintiffs herein, relying upon said bond, furnished to the said J. S. Antonelle, at his special instance and request, between the dates of 10th and 31st of December, 1895, and with the full knowledge and consent of the said bondsmen, A. D. Turner and J. L. Vermeil, labor and material to the value of four thousand nine hundred and sixty-eight and $\frac{75}{100}$ (\$4,968.75) dollars, which labor and material was used in the construction of said tunnel with the full knowledge, consent, and at the instance and request, of said defendants." That the defendants, although requested, refused to pay plaintiffs the said sum of \$4,968.75, or any part thereof. Judgment was prayed for said sum and costs. Defendant Antonelle made no appearance, and his default was duly entered. The case was tried in the court below without a jury, findings filed, and judgment entered thereupon in favor of the plaintiffs.

The court found that the plaintiffs did "furnish to the said J. S. Antonelle labor and material to the value of $4,968.75," which said labor and material were used by said Antonelle in the construction of the said tunnel. The finding above quoted is in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and is the vital finding upon which the court evidently based its conclusions of law in favor of plaintiffs, and against appellants, Turner and Vermeil. The appellants specifically attack the finding as being without support in the evidence, and we are of opinion that there is no evidence in the record to support it. The only evidence in any way bearing upon the finding is that of the plaintiff Cadenasso. He testified: "We advanced this $4,900 under these agreements. * * * The amount of money advanced by us, and for which this action is brought, is as follows, viz.: Cash advanced to J. S. Antonelle & Co., $4,968.75." While the same witness was upon the stand, the court, addressing him, said: "As I understand it, you furnished certain moneys to Mr. Antonelle, and as security for that you received an assignment of this contract, and, in addition to getting your money back, you were to get half of the profits. A. Half of the profits." In the discussion of the evidence and issues, and in answer to questions of the court, the attorney for plaintiffs, addressing the court, said: "Our position is just this: That Cadenasso advanced this money under the bond, and took personal security—the assignment—to secure him for the money advanced, and, to pay him for the use of the money, one-half of the profits of the transaction." It is therefore apparent from the record, from the only evidence in the record and from the statement of counsel to the court, that the testimony as to the "money advanced" was what plaintiffs relied upon in support of the allegation of "labor and material furnished" by plaintiffs to Antonelle. The court in the finding evidently treated the evidence as to money being advanced as the equivalent of "labor and material." In this we think the learned judge was in error. Money is not labor, and it is not "material furnished," in the sense of the undertaking and the complaint. The appellants, Turner and Vermeil, were sureties for Antonelle, and it is elementary law that sureties are never bound beyond the strict letter of their contract. They have a right to stand on the precise terms of their contract, and there is no authority for extending their liability beyond the stipulation to which they have chosen to bind themselves. In this case they bound themselves "to all persons who perform labor or furnish materials to the parties of the second part." The plaintiffs did neither. Under the mechanic's lien law of this state in favor of laborers who perform labor upon, and material men who furnish material to be used in, the construction of a building, it was held that one who advanced money as a loan with which to buy material was not entitled to the benefit of the statute. Godefroy v. Caldwell, 2 Cal. 492. In the opinion it is said: "One who advances money as a loan, although it is expressly for the payment of materials and labor devoted to the erection of a building, can have no claim to the benefit of the law." In Dart v. Mayhew, 60 Ga. 104, it was held that creditors furnishing money to sawmills have no lien under the acts of 1868 and 1873 and the Code. The language of the act is: "All persons furnishing saw-mills with timber, logs, provisions, or any other thing necessary to carry on the work of saw-mills, shall have liens on said mills and their products." Code, § 1985. In the opinion it is said: "While, therefore, money is necessary, in one sense, to carry on the work of a sawmill, by buying the things necessary for that work, still it is not primarily the thing necessary. It buys what is used to carry it on from others. The people who actually furnish the timber or provisions, or other things necessary, have the lien. The money lender does not. If it had been the intention of the legislature to give such a lien, money would have been included under its own name, and not under the general words 'or any other thing necessary.'" The statute of Texas (Pasch. Dig. art. 7112) provides: "Any person or firm, artisan or mechanic, who may labor, furnish material * * * to erect any house or improvement * * * shall have a lien on the lot or lots, or land necessarily connected therewith, to secure payment for labor done, material and fixtures furnished for construction or repairs." In the construction of this statute the supreme court said: "The statute under consideration seems sufficiently broad to embrace any person who might furnish material; yet the evident intention of the legislature in the use of this term was to include some character of material which entered into the structure of the building, and formed a component part of it, and not a loan of money with which to purchase the same." Gaylord v. Loughridge, 50 Tex. 577. To the same effect, see Boisot, Mech. Liens, § 114; Phil. Mech. Liens (3d Ed.) § 159; Weathersby v. Sleeper, 42 Miss. 741; Brown v. Rodocker, 65 Iowa, 55, 21 N. W. 160. While the present case does not involve any question as to a claim of lien, the authorities quoted are in point, as illustrating the meaning to be given in the clause of the undertaking. It follows the language of section 1203, Code Civ. Proc., in regard to the undertaking to be given by the contractor under the law of this state as to mechanics' liens. The language of the portion of the section in point is, "Said bond shall by its terms be made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor for or furnish materials to the contractor." The question here is as to whether evidence that plaintiffs furnished money will support the finding that they furnished material, and we think it will not, either upon reason or authority. It is claimed that plaintiff Cadenas-so testified that $1,600 was for material. He did in one part of his evidence say that he believed something like $1,600 was for material. He did not state what the material was, nor where nor to whom it was delivered. If this, in view of the other evidence of Cadenasso, were sufficient to support any finding as to material furnished, it would not change the result here. The witness said that he received under the contract $1,140, which was credited on account of materials. This would leave only $430 due for materials. This would not support the finding that $4,968.75 was due plaintiff for labor and materials furnished to defendant Antonelle.

The sixth finding, to the effect that the plaintiffs were not at any time partners of Antonelle, is supported by the evidence. The assignment by Antonelle of his contract, and all sums due or to become due under it, with an agreement to divide the profits with plaintiffs, for the use of the money advanced, did not make the plaintiffs partners of Antonelle. Hanna v. Flint, 14 Cal. 74; Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 610, 55 Pac. 425; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 454, 55 Pac. 147; Eastman v. Clark, 53 N. H. 276.

Under the views herein expressed, it becomes unnecessary to discuss other points. As defendant Antonelle has not appealed, the judgment is in full force against him. We advise that the judgment and order, as to appellants, Turner and Vermeil, be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order, as to appellants, Turner and Vermeil, are reversed.

MCGEE v. HAYES. (Sac. 565.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

INSANE PERSONS—GUARDIANSHIP—APPOINTMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, providing that, on the filing of a petition for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person, notice must be given to such person of the "time and place" of the hearing at least five days before the time fixed, and "such person if able to attend, must be produced," the personal presence of such person on the hearing, and his request that the petition be granted, do not cure fatal defects in the notice of the hearing served on him.

2. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, requiring notice to be given to an incompetent person of the "time and place" of the hearing of a petition for the appointment of his guardian, etc., where an order made on the filing of the petition fixed a certain day "as the time for the hearing," without specifying the hour or place, and directed a notice to be given of the "time and place" of the hearing, a copy of such order was not a sufficient notice of the hearing.

3. Where the hearing on a petition for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person was adjourned to March 3d, the court has no jurisdiction to hear it on March 2d, though the intention was to adjourn the hearing to that day.

4. An order by a probate court, appointing a guardian for an incompetent person, which is void because the proceedings show that the court was without jurisdiction to make it, is subject to collateral attack.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Tulare county.

Action by William L. McGee, by his guardian, Warren W. Hastings, against James C. Hayes. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Shaw & Murray, Hannah & Miller, and Power & Alford, for appellant. R. F. Roth and Chas. G. Lamberson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Forcible entry and detainer. Trial by a jury, and verdict for plaintiff, and judgment thereon that plaintiff be restored to the possession of the premises. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The verdict was general,—“that defendant had been guilty of forcible entry and forcible detainer of the lands described in the complaint, and that plaintiff is entitled to a restitution of the premises.”

Appellant claims that the proceedings under which Hastings was appointed guardian were void because (1) no citation was ever issued or served; (2) if the order be treated as a citation, it is void for the reason that it did not state the time when, or the place where, the defendant was required to appear; (3) the order was made and entered March 2, 1897, while the hearing was set for March 3d. It appears that, upon the petition of Hastings, it was adjudged that McGee “has become an incompetent person, and that it is necessary that a guardian of his estate and person should be appointed,” and Hastings was accordingly so appointed. The order recites that he “was duly notified of the time and place of the hearing of the petition heretofore filed herein, and it appearing that the said William L. McGee appeared in person at the hearing of said petition on this day, and requested that said petition be granted, it is therefore ordered,” etc. The only citation issued was the order of the judge made on reading and filing the petition, in which it was “ordered that Tuesday, the 23d day of February, 1897, be, and the same is hereby, appointed as the time [no place or hour mentioned] for hearing said petition, and it is hereby ordered that notice be given to said Wm. L. McGee of the time and place of hearing said petition,” etc. The only notice given or citation served was a copy of this order. On February 23d the court made an order “that the hearing of the aforesaid petition be, and the same is hereby, continued until Tuesday, March 3, 1897.” The order appointing the guardian is dated March 2, 1897, and is marked, “Filed March 2, 1897.” The guardian took the oath of office and filed his bond on March 2, 1897, and letters of guardianship were issued to him that day. When these various proceedings were offered in evidence, defendant objected to their admission on several specific grounds, challenging their competency, relevancy, and materiality. Respondent contends that the personal presence of the incompetent at the hearing cured any defects in the notice or service of the notice, and that by his presence he consented to the order, and waived notice, and that the order so shows on its face. The presence of the incompetent could not supply the requirement of the statute that he should be served with notice of the hearing. He was incapable, by reason of his incompetency, to consent to the jurisdiction of the court, or waive any of the steps necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the court, or to make any request that the petition be granted. Upon the filing of the petition the court or judge "must cause a notice to be given to the supposed insane or incompetent person of the time and place of hearing the case, not less than five days before the time so appointed; and such person, if able to attend, must be produced on the hearing." Code Civ. Proc. § 1763. The statute requires the personal presence of the incompetent, if it can be had, as well as that notice of the hearing of the petition be given him. If the order may be treated as a notice, and a copy of it may be served as a notice, it is requisite that it should state the time and place of the hearing. In the present case the order fixed February 23d "as the time for the hearing," but it directed "notice to be given of the time and place of hearing said petition." This direction was not complied with by simply serving a copy of the order in the form given. But if the notice to appear February 23d could be treated as sufficient, and the adjournment of the hearing to March 3d could also be held sufficient, the court had no authority to hear the petition March 2d, and make the appointment, as the record shows was done. Counsel for respondent states in his brief, but it does not elsewhere appear, that "the 3d of March, 1897, did not fall upon a Tuesday, but upon a Wednesday; and the hearing of the matter was intended by the court to be continued to Tuesday, March 2, 1897, on which last-named day the hearing was had." If we were permitted to reject the day of the month named (March 3d), and take the day of the week named (Tuesday), the order would fail to show what Tuesday. There are many Tuesdays in the year, but there is but one March 3d. We do not think we are authorized to reject a definite time, and accept one so indefinite. The order was prematurely made, and was without authority.

The attack is collateral, it is true, but the proceedings disclose all the steps taken to confer jurisdiction, from which it clearly appears on the face of the record that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order. In such case the order could be attacked collaterally. Land Co. v. Maddux, 109 Cal. 633, 42 Pac 295. See cases cited at page 640, 109 Cal., and page 297, 42 Pac.; 1 Freem. Judgm.

§ 130. As plaintiff's right to maintain the action depends upon the authority of the guardian, it follows that the judgment and the order denying a new trial should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. CHILDS. (Cr. 577.)¹

CRIMINAL LAW—LARCENY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where the evidence tended to show that defendant committed larceny by aiding and abetting a co-defendant in taking the property stolen, evidence that defendant and his co-defendant had frequently been seen together on occasions other than when the larceny was committed was admissible, as tending to prove a conspiracy in the commission of the crime.

2. An instruction in a prosecution for larceny that mere possession of stolen property is of itself not sufficient to convict, "but, if there is other evidence tending to show guilt, taken in connection with the possession of the property stolen, the rule is different," is not erroneous, for ambiguity of the expression "the rule is different."

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Cal. Childs was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was indicted jointly with one Piggott for the crime of grand larceny. The defendants demanded and had separate trials, and each was convicted as charged. This present appeal is taken by the defendant Childs from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Piggott also appealed, and in his case the judgment and order appealed from have been heretofore affirmed. 59 Pac. 31. Most of the questions raised on this appeal were decided against the contentions of appellants in the said appeal of Piggott, and need not be here further considered. The evidence in this case is slightly different from that in the Piggott Case; but the points that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict, and that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that there was no evidence against the appellant, are as clearly not maintainable as the same contentions were in the Piggott Case. We observe only two points made here which did not arise in the Piggott Case, which are necessary to be noticed:

The court did not err in permitting the prosecution to show that Childs and Piggott had been frequently seen together on occasions other than the one at which the larceny is alleged to have been committed. The evidence tended to show that Childs committed the larceny by aiding and abetting Piggott in taking the stolen property from the person of the complaining witness. It was necessary, therefore, for the prosecution to show that the defendants were co-conspirators in the commission of the crime; and it cannot be said that the fact of their being seen frequently together was entirely irrelevant, and did not tend in any degree whatever to establish the conspiracy.

The other point to be noticed arises upon the contention of appellant that the judgment should be reversed on account of a certain part of the charge of the court to the jury. The court, having instructed the jury that the mere possession of the stolen goods by appellant would not of itself be sufficient to convict him, proceeded as follows: "In other words, no person can be convicted of crime merely by proof of being found in possession of stolen property. The possession of stolen property, in and of itself, if there be no other evidence, either circumstantial or direct, would not be sufficient to convict anybody; but if there is any other evidence tending to show guilt, taken in connection with the possession of the stolen property, the rule is different." The last part of this language, to wit, "the rule is different," is an inapt and somewhat ambiguous termination of the sentence; but we do not think that the jury could have been influenced prejudicially to the appellant by the language used. The charge of the court to the jury was, on the whole, correct, and very favorable to appellant, and we do not think that the language above quoted could have led them astray. A critical examination of the part of the charge in question made afterwards by counsel at their leisure, and with full time to closely compare each part of it with the context, may enable them to point out incongruities, and even absurdities, in the language used; but the jury, when hearing it, would evidently take it to mean merely that, while the possession of stolen goods would not be of itself sufficient to warrant a conviction of a defendant charged with larceny, yet there might be in a case other evidence which, taken in connection with the circumstance of the possession of the stolen property, would be sufficient to convict. Counsel for appellant contends that the court intended to instruct, and did instruct, the jury that the possession of the stolen property would be sufficient to convict a defendant if there was any other evidence at all tending in the slightest degree to show his guilt; but we do not think that this is a correct statement of the meaning of the expression, or that the jury would take it with the meaning ascribed to it by appellant. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v.
FREESE et al. (S. F. 2,073.)

APPEAL—UNDERTAKING.

Where an appeal has been abandoned, and a new appeal taken, an undertaking prepared with reference to the first appeal will not support the second, though not filed until after the second was taken.
59 P.—49

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against A. C. Freese, administrator, etc., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Margaret A. Bullard appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent. Geo. B. Collins, for defendants.

HENSHAW, J. This is a motion to dismiss appellant's appeal, which grows out of the following facts: Appellant's notice of appeal from an order of court made and given on the 13th day of March, 1899, was served and filed on the 15th day of March, 1899. On the fifth day thereafter—that is, on the 20th day of March, 1899—the appellant procured to be executed an undertaking upon appeal reciting that, whereas Margaret J. Bullard "has appealed" to the supreme court, etc., that in consideration of the premises and of "such appeal," etc. This undertaking bore date the 20th day of March, 1899, and the jurat of the notary thereon is of the same date. On the 21st day of March, 1899, appellant's attorney served and filed a second notice of appeal, and on the following day, March 22, 1899, this undertaking was filed. The first appeal had lapsed for failure to file the undertaking within the statutory period, and this motion to dismiss is directed against the second appeal, upon the ground that no undertaking thereon had been filed. To this appellant makes answer that until the filing of the undertaking it has no force, effect, or validity, and that when filed it is an undertaking in reference to the condition of things at that time existing; therefore, that this particular undertaking filed upon March 22d must be construed to have reference to, and to be an undertaking upon, the appeal, notice of which was given upon March 21st. But we think this position untenable. It is required of a valid undertaking upon appeal that it shall refer with definiteness to the particular appeal to which it relates, and, if it fails so to do, it is ambiguous and insufficient. Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456, 635, and 8 Pac. 709; Loan Associates v. Wilkins, 71 Cal. 626, 12 Pac. 799; Pignaz v. Burnett, 121 Cal. 292, 53 Pac. 633. At the time when the sureties upon this undertaking entered into it, but one appeal had been attempted, but one notice of appeal had been given, and the undertaking clearly and distinctly refers to that. It is the right of the surety to stand upon the strict letter of his undertaking. He can be held to no different contract from that into which he has entered. In this case the undertaking of the sureties was to stand responsible for damages and costs which might follow the prosecution of a particular appeal clearly referred to in their undertaking. By the construction which appellant seeks, the undertaking would be wrested from its natural language, and held to apply, not to that appeal which was subsisting at the time the contract was entered into, but to another appeal, no step in which had been taken at the time the sureties executed their bond. It is true, as appellant says, that the attorney became the agent of the sureties for the purpose of filing the undertaking, and that it takes validity and effect from the date of the filing. But the agency of the attorney was to file the undertaking in the particular appeal to which it made reference, and the validity which the undertaking has as of the date of its filing is a validity in reference only to the particular appeal in question. We conclude, therefore, that there has been no undertaking as required by law filed after the notice of appeal of March 21st, and that this motion to dismiss should be granted. It is ordered accordingly.

In re ATWOOD'S ESTATE. (Sac. 603.)

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION—REVOCATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1511, provides that, where an administrator neglects for two months after his appointment to give notice to creditors, the court must revoke his letters, and appoint some other person in his stead. Section 1469 provides that where the estate does not exceed $1,500 the whole estate shall be assigned to the widow, and there shall be no further proceedings in the administration unless further estate be discovered. Held that, where the value of an estate is less than $1,500, letters of administration granted to the widow of deceased cannot be revoked, and another appointed in her stead, though she has failed to give notice to creditors.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Glenn county.

Proceedings by H. B. Sanders against Iturea Atwood to have her letters of administration as administrator of the estate of Benjamin E. Atwood, deceased, set aside, and petitioner appointed in her stead. From an order granting plaintiff's request, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. L. Donohoe, for appellant. Seth Millington, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Appeal from an order removing appellant as administratrix, and appointing respondent as administrator in her stead. Deceased died December 7, 1894, leaving surviving him his wife, Iturea Atwood, but no children. On the 8th day of February, 1897, the superior court, upon proper petition, duly made an order appointing the said Iturea Atwood administratrix of the estate of deceased; and she thereupon qualified, and letters of administration were issued to her. Thereafter the administratrix procured the appointment of appraisers, and on the 23d day of June, 1897, an inventory and appraisal were duly returned and filed, which showed the entire estate to be community property, and of the value of $390. On the 18th of October, 1897, one H. B. Sanders, the respondent herein, at the written request of a sister and also of a niece of deceased, filed a petition asking to have the letters of administration issued to said Iturea Atwood revoked, solely upon the ground that she had failed and neglected for more than two months to have notice to creditors published as required by statute, and further asking that petitioner, Sanders, be appointed administrator of said estate. This petition did not show, or attempt to show, that the petitioner, or any one whom he represented, was a creditor of deceased; neither did it show that the said property was not community property. It stated the value of the estate to be less than $1,500, to wit, $650. On the 14th day of February, 1898, before any citation had been ordered, issued, or served on the said petitioner, the said administratrix applied to the court for an order directing proper publication of notice to creditors, and the court then and there refused to make the order. Thereafter the respondent asked for and procured a citation, upon his petition, directing the appellant to show cause on the 18th day of April why her letters should not be revoked, and respondent appointed administrator. On the day fixed in the citation the appellant filed her answer to the petition. The court proceeded to hear the evidence, documentary and otherwise, but the record does not show the date the said matter was heard. It does appear, however, that at the time of the hearing the notice to creditors had been published, because the record shows that the affidavit of the publishers of the Orland News was introduced in evidence, which showed that the notice to creditors was published in said paper in its "weekly issues of March 31, April 7, 14, and 21, 1898." On June 6, 1898, the court, after the publication of notice to creditors had been so made by appellant, made an order revoking the letters of appellant, and directing that letters of administration issue to respondent. This order was made without any proof that respondent had posted notices or given any notice whatever of his application, except that given by the service of citation upon respondent.

As we think the court erred in revoking the letters of appellant, and as no letters could issue to respondent until the letters of appellant had been revoked, it is not necessary here to discuss the question as to whether letters could be issued to respondent without giving the usual notice of his application as prescribed by statute. The court below evidently, without considering any other section of the Code, regarded section 1511, Code Civ. Proc., as mandatory. The section reads: "If an executor or administrator neglects, for two months after his appointment, to give notice to creditors, as prescribed by this chapter, the court must revoke his letters and appoint some other person in his stead, equally or the next in order entitled to the appointment." We think the section should be read and construed with section 1469, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that if, upon the return of the inventory of the estate of a deceased person, it shall appear therefrom that the value of the whole of the estate does not exceed the sum of $1,500, the court shall, after giving notice and upon hearing, if it finds the value of the estate does not exceed $1,500, "assign to the widow of deceased, if there be a widow, * * * the whole of the estate * * * and there must be no further proceedings in the administration unless further estate be discovered." In this case it not only appears from the inventory, but from the petition upon which the court acted, that the estate does not exceed $1,500. The widow is therefore entitled to the whole of the estate, and petitioners have no interest whatever in it. After the estate is set apart, "there shall be no further proceedings in the administration." Evidently notice to creditors is a proceeding in the administration, and therefore the statute is express that such notice must not be given after the estate is so set apart to the widow. It is true in this case that the estate had not been so set apart, but as the widow was and is entitled to have it set apart, and this regardless of the time that has elapsed, we cannot see any possible good that would be accomplished by publishing notice to creditors. The law does not require vain things. Neither does it allow parties to come into court and put the machinery of the law in motion in matters in which they have no possible interest. In Re Palomares' Estate, 63 Cal. 402, it appeared from the inventory that the whole of the estate did not exceed $1,500. After notice as directed by the statute, and on the 28th day of February, 1882, the court set apart the whole of the property for the support of the minor children. On July 12, 1882, one Briswalter, a creditor, filed a petition asking that the order of February 28th be set aside upon the ground, among others, that no notice to creditors had been given at the time said order was made. The lower court denied the prayer of the petition, and this court affirmed the order. In the opinion it is said, "For the decision of this appeal, it is necessary only to say that no notice to general creditors was required to be given." It clearly appears in this case that the widow is entitled to all the estate. There is no necessity for further administration. The appointment of another administrator, and the publication of notice to creditors, could have no possible effect, except to diminish and help to eat up the very small pittance left to the widow by the deceased. It could not possibly benefit creditors. Then why should notice be given to them? The cost of publication, the commissions of the administrator, and the fee of his attorney would have to be paid out of the widow's mite. It might benefit the administrator, his attorney, and the publisher of a newspaper; but the object of the law is to protect the widow and minor children, and not to pay out of the estate useless expenses to persons in no way interested in the estate, except to the extent they may be able to get money out of it. The order should be reversed.

PEOPLE v. SOAP. (Cr. 564.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1899.)

CRIMINAL LAW—WITNESSES—CONDUCT OF JURY—AFFIDAVITS—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

1. Where a witness, in speaking of acts of the deceased, used the word "presume" (meaning his best recollection), but said that he was not guessing, but that was his best information, the statement was properly admitted.

2. An affidavit of a juror relating to misconduct of the jury, other than their having arrived at a verdict by chance, will not be considered.

3. A new trial will not be granted on ground of newly-discovered evidence where such evidence was of little importance, and no diligence was used in discovering evidence before trial.

4. When the trial judge refused a new trial, it will not be granted on appeal, when the verdict was on conflicting evidence.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Bernardino county.

A. F. Soap was convicted of manslaughter, and from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Bledsoe & Bledsoe, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The defendant was accused by information of the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed by feloniously, killing one John Larkin. He was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying the motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that the verdict is against the evidence, because the evidence shows that the homicide was committed in justifiable self-defense. This contention cannot be maintained. The circumstances of the killing, as detailed by the appellant himself when on the witness stand, tended, no doubt, to a considerable degree, to show that the appellant killed the deceased in necessary self-defense; and it is contended that as the appellant was the only eyewitness of the killing, other than the deceased, and as it was uncontradicted by any other witness, and was not inconsistent with other facts proven, therefore it is to be taken as true. But one Spikes, a witness for the prosecution, testified that he saw the killing, and that the occurrences connected with it were different in some important respects from those testified to by the appellant. Appellant contends that the testimony of Spikes was "so manifestly corrupt and false as to forbid its consideration for any purpose, except in aid of defendant's vindication." This position, however, is not tenable. Although none of the other witnesses who came upon the scene immediately after the fatal shot was heard saw the witness Spikes there, still there was nothing in the evidence to preclude the jury from believing that he was there. It certainly could not be said, as a matter of law, that the jury should not have considered the testimony of Spikes. Of course, it does not appear how much, if any, weight the jury gave to his testimony. The jury were not bound to receive the testimony of the appellant as absolutely true; nor, if they believed the testimony of the appellant, can it be truly said that, taking his testimony together with the general facts proven, the jury were not warranted in finding that the homicide was not committed in necessary self-defense.

Appellant contends that the court erred in not striking out a certain expression used by the witness Spikes. The point arose in this way: The witness had been asked to describe the manner of deceased towards the defendant, and the witness testified as follows: "He was kind of waving one hand out that way, talking, and he had one hand down this way. He was kind of waving, that way. He was drunk and staggering, and he had this one down. I presume it was on his pants, I couldn't tell. Mr. Bledsoe: We don't want your presumptions. State what you saw. We move to strike out what the witness says about presuming. The Court: What do you mean by saying you presume? That you are merely guessing at it, or that it was your best information? Witness: That was my best information." There was no error in this. While a witness can testify only to facts which are within his knowledge, he is not required to testify with that certainty which excludes all doubt from his mind. The word "presume," as used by the witness, was nothing more than a statement of his best recollection.

Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed on account of the alleged misconduct of the jury, by which they were prevented from giving the case a fair and due consideration. This misconduct is based upon the fact, which appellant sought to show by an affidavit of one of the jurors, that while the jury were in consultation over the case a statement was made by one of them that a verdict of manslaughter could only be followed by the punishment of imprisonment in the county jail for six months, and that such statement induced a large number of the jurors who had been voting for an acquittal to agree to a verdict of manslaughter. This contention cannot be maintained; for it has been definitely settled that the affidavit of a juror cannot be received to impeach the verdict, except where it is the result of a resort to the determination of chance. See People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 Pac. 59, and cases there cited.

The contention that a new trial should be granted on account of newly-discovered evidence is without merit. There was no diligence shown in discovering the testimony before the trial, and the alleged newly-discovered evidence was of little importance, even if it could be held admissible. No other errors are relied on for a reversal.

Appellant's counsel argues very strongly that the jury should have rendered a verdict of acquittal, and that, considering the great age and physical condition of appellant, and the conduct of the deceased, it should have been found that he committed the homicide in necessary self-defense. This argument has considerable support in the general facts of the case. In cases of this kind juries, no doubt, sometimes attach too much importance to the mere fact of the homicide, and convictions sometimes follow where the plea of self-defense should have been sustained. But the decisions in such cases rest with juries; and where in such a case the trial judge, who has heard all the evidence, declines to grant a new trial, it cannot be granted here, where, as in the case at bar, the testimony is fairly and substantially conflicting. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OLIVERIA. (Cr. 566.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INFORMATION—DEFENDANT'S NAME—JURY—SPECIAL PANEL—CHALLENGE—EVIDENCE—CONFESSION—DEFENDANT COMPELLED TO STAND FOR COMPARISON—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Pen. Code, § 959, provides that an information is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom that the defendant is named, and, if described by a fictitious name, that his real name is unknown. Section 960 declares that no information is insufficient, nor can the judgment thereon be affected by reason of any defect in form which does not prejudice a substantial right of defendant. Defendant's name appeared in the title of the information as "Frank Oliveria, Jr.," in the charging part as "Frank Oliveria" and "Frank Oliveria, Jr.," and in the indorsement thereon as "Frank Oliveria, Jr." Held, that it sufficiently appeared from the whole information that defendant was charged under the name of "Frank Oliveria, Jr."

2. Where part of the regular panel of jurors had been called in another case, and defendant expressly waived any irregularity in that regard, after the jury had been completed from a special panel and sworn, a challenge to the panel, for the reason that there was not in the box at any time during the drawing the full number of names, was properly denied, since the objection to the regular panel had been waived, and a challenge to the special panel can only be made, under Pen. Code, § 1064, on account of bias of the officer who summoned them, before a juror is sworn, as required by Id. § 1060.

3. A defendant charged with robbery may be compelled to stand up for comparison in size by the prosecuting witness with the party who robbed him.

4. Where the testimony of defendant that his confession was not free and involuntary is contradicted, the jury, under proper instructions, are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses in regard to the matter, and their verdict will not be disturbed.

5. The failure of the court to instruct the jury in a criminal case on any proposition deemed essential by defendant is not error, unless he made a request for such instruction.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county.

Frank Oliveria, Jr., was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Bennett & Sawyer, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

COOPER, C. Appeal from judgment and order denying motion for new trial. Defendant was charged with the crime of robbery, committed on the 11th day of December, 1898, in the county of Alameda, by forcibly taking from the person of one Joseph Nevis $180 in gold coin. He entered his plea of "Not guilty," and after trial before a jury was convicted, and sentenced to a term of three years in the state prison at San Quentin. He does not claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, nor that the court erred in giving or refusing any instruction to the jury. He specifies certain alleged errors which he claims are prejudicial, and which we will notice in the order presented. It is claimed that the information charges the defendant under the name of "Frank Oliveria," and that the evidence shows that the name of defendant is "Frank Oliveria, Jr.," and that defendant objected to the evidence on the ground of such variance. The information is entitled, "People of the State of California against Frank Oliveria, Jr." In the charging part it is stated: "The said Frank Oliveria, on the 11th day of," etc.; and concludes by stating: "And all of the acts of the said Frank Oliveria, Jr., in the premises, were and are contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." The information was indorsed on the back thereof, "People of the State of California against Frank Oliveria, Jr." When it was read to defendant with its indorsements, and he was asked his true name, he answered that his true name "is Frank Oliveria, Jr." We think it sufficiently appears from the whole information that the defendant was charged under the name of "Frank Oliveria, Jr." The Penal Code provides (section 959): "The indictment or information is sufficient, if it can be understood therefrom: * * * (3) That the defendant is named, or, if his name cannot be discovered, that he is described by a fictitious name, with a statement that his true name is to the jury or district attorney, as the case may be, unknown." Section 960 provides: "No indictment or information is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form which does not tend to the prejudice of a substantial right of the defendant upon its merits." In City of San Francisco v. Randall, 54 Cal. 410, it is said, "The addition 'Jr.' is no part of a name proper;" and it was accordingly held that where in one proceeding "Jr." was used, and in another it was not, it was wholly immaterial. In People v. Boggs, 20 Cal. 433, the indictment was against James B. Boggs, and the verdict was against "defendant, J. M. Boggs." It was held that the error was immaterial. See People v. Ah Kim, 34 Cal. 189; People v. Hughes, 29 Cal. 262. In 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. § 687, it is said: "'Junior' and 'senior' are no part of a name, however commonly employed; so that neither the omission nor insertion of either, contrary to what would be deemed proper, will create a variance or otherwise injure the indictment." The text is supported by many cases cited in the foot note at page 407.

It is claimed that the court erred in overruling a challenge to the panel of jurors. It appeared during the drawing of the jury that a part of the regular panel of jurors, six in number, had been called in another department of the superior court in a case on trial in such other department, and for this reason did not answer to their names when called. The clerk informed the judge of the court that there were six names in the box, at the time of the commencement of the drawing of the jury, of jurors who were engaged in the trial of a case in another department of the court. The judge, addressing defendant's counsel, said: "Now, gentlemen, we will take this jury out of the box, take those six names out of the box, and draw again, or proceed as we have proceeded up to this point, as you please, addressing myself now to the defense. What is your pleasure about it? When we commenced to draw the jury for this case, there were the names of six jurors who were engaged in another department on a jury trying a case. Obviously, those names ought not to have been in the box. We will take them out of the box, and commence to draw again, or go on with the trial, as you please." The attorney for defendant answered: "I think we would rather have them taken out of the box." After some further remarks, the judge said to defendant's counsel: "What I want to do is simply to give you an opportunity to have a full panel drawn without those names in the box. I understand you, therefore, to waive any informality up to this point." Counsel for defendant answered, "Yes." No objection or exception appears in the record up to this point to the regular panel, or to taking six jurors out of the box. After the regular panel was exhausted, the court ordered a special venire to issue for eight jurors. No objection or exception was taken to the special panel before the jurors were sworn, the jurors were examined, the jury completed, and all sworn to try the cause. After the jury had been sworn, the defendant's counsel challenged the panel on the ground "that there was not in the box at the commencement of the drawing, or at any time during the drawing, the full number of names that should be there during the drawing." The court denied the challenge, and defendant excepted. We think the challenge was properly denied. It did not appear whether the challenge was to the regular panel or to the panel returned on the special venire, or to both panels. If it was the intent to challenge the regular panel, the defendant had expressly waived any irregularity in that regard. If the intent was to interpose a challenge to the panel called on the special venire, this could only be done on account of the bias of the officer who summoned them, which would have been good ground of challenge to a juror. Pen. Code, § 1064; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 195, 48 Pac. 75, and cases cited. Whether the intent was to interpose a challenge to either panel, or to both, it must have been taken before a juror was sworn. Pen. Code, § 1060.

While the witness Nevis was testifying, he referred to one of the parties who robbed him as a little man, about five feet high, more or less. The district attorney then said: "How did his size compare with this defendant's? Will you stand up, Mr. Oliveria (speaking to defendant)?" Counsel for defendant said: "We object to this question, and to his (the defendant) standing up, on the grounds that it is immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant." The court overruled the objection, and defendant excepted, and now claims in his brief that it was error to make the defendant stand up, and thereby testify against himself. The record only shows that the district attorney asked defendant to stand up. It does not show that the judge told him to stand up, or that he did stand up. But, if it were disclosed by the record that he was compelled by the court to stand up for comparison, this would not be error. People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 347, 19 Pac. 161.

The confessions of the defendant to the effect that he was guilty of the crime, and that he assisted in forcibly taking the money from Nevis, were admitted in evidence. Defendant claims that such confessions were not free and voluntary, and were made under the inducement of a promise that it would go easier with him if he would confess. Three witnesses for the prosecution testified to the effect that the confessions were voluntary on the part of defendant, and not made under the influence of threats, intimidations, promises, or inducements of any kind. It was attempted by defendant's own testimony to show that promises were made to him that it would be made easier for him if he would confess. We do not think the defendant's evidence clearly shows any such promises, but, if it did, the jury, under proper instructions from the court, were the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses in regard to the matter. It would be a strange rule that would allow the confessions of a defendant to be given in evidence upon clear proof that they were made voluntarily, and without any promise, threat, or inducement, and then allow them to be stricken out, upon the defendant testifying that they were made under the fear of a threat or the influence of a promise. If such were the law, it would always lie in the power of a defendant to clear away from the case all confessions by his own evidence, and this regardless of the truth of such testimony.

It is said that defendant was drunk at the time of the commission of the offense, and that the court erred in not instructing the jury fully as to drunkenness. The court of its own volition, and we think correctly, in its charge to the jury, stated pretty fully the law as to voluntary intoxication in criminal cases. No error is alleged as to the giving of the instruction. It may not have been as full a treatise on the law of drunkenness as defendant desired, but it certainly covered the law pertinent to the evidence in this case. Defendant does not complain of the refusal of the court to give any instruction asked by him. If he desired an instruction containing a correct rule of law upon the evidence and pertinent to the case, he should have asked it, and, if it had been refused, assign such refusal as error. The failure of the court to instruct the jury upon any proposition deemed essential by the defendant is not error, unless he made a request for such instruction. People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 460, 32 Pac. 531.

The remark made by the judge to defendant's counsel during the progress of the trial is not reversible error. The manner of counsel in asking many apparently immaterial questions and repeating them seems to have exhausted the patience of the judge, and to have merited, at least, some rebuke. The language used by the judge in addressing counsel evidently was not that of a Chesterfield. The same thing probably could have been said in language more courteous, and with more regard to feelings of counsel, yet we do not think the remark was such as to have prejudiced the rights of the defendant. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

BROWNE v. SWEET et al. (Sac. 601.)

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — NECESSARY PARTIES—PRESENTATION TO ADMINISTRATOR—NECESSITY—PLEADING—PRESUMPTION.

1. The administrator of a deceased mortgagor is not a necessary party to a foreclosure, where his entire estate, including the mortgaged premises, has been regularly set apart to the use of his family as exempt from execution, or as a probate homestead, and the administration closed.

2. In an action to foreclose a mortgage executed by one since deceased, an averment that the court set apart a homestead does not authorize the presumption that it had been selected prior to mortgagor's death, so that the debt must be allowed by his administrator.

3. Presentation of a claim secured by a mortgage to the mortgagor's administrator for allowance is not required when the mortgaged premises were not selected and declared a homestead prior to the mortgagor's death.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Modoc county.

Action by E. L. Browne against Urena Sweet and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Spences & Raker and C. A. Raker, for appellants. H. L. Sparger and G. F. Harris, for respondent.

TEMPLE, J. This appeal is from the judgment which was entered upon overruling defendants' demurrer to the amended complaint, the defendants declining to answer. The action was to foreclose a mortgage given by one J. R. Sweet to secure his promissory note for the sum of $500. In addition to the usual allegations in regard to the mortgage, it is averred in the complaint that J. R. Sweet died intestate on the 4th of October, A. D. 1895, leaving as his only heirs at law his wife, Urena Sweet, and two minor children, to wit, Celia Sweet and Alfred Kenneth Sweet, who are the defendants herein. It is further alleged that letters of administration were issued upon the estate of J. R. Sweet, deceased, to the defendant Urena Sweet on the 23d day of October, 1895, and that thereafter, to wit, on the 23d day of April, 1897, "the said Urena Sweet obtained her final discharge as administratrix of said estate, and said estate was settled, and the administration thereof was closed, without any provision whatever being made for the payment of said mortgage, and that at this date there is no qualified or acting administrator of said estate." It is further shown that at no time has there been property or money in the estate which could have been applied to the payment of the debt, and that the estate possessed no assets except the property set apart for the use of the family and the mortgaged premises; and, further, that on the 7th day of January, 1896, "the superior court in and for the county of Modoc, by its decree regularly made, set apart said lands described in said mortgage as a homestead to the defendant in this action," and these defendants are the only persons who have, or claim to have, any interest in said land. Plaintiff waives all claim to a deficiency judgment. A special demurrer was interposed, which was sufficient to raise the questions presented here.

The first point made is that the administratrix of the estate of J. R. Sweet should have been made a defendant. It appears from the complaint that the entire estate had been regularly set apart to the use of the family of the deceased, either as property exempt from execution, or as a probate homestead, and that the estate had never had other assets; and also that the administration has closed, and there is now no administrator, and no estate which could be administered. The estate of J. R. Sweet, therefore, if it can be said that there is such a thing, could not be interested in the matter.

It is also contended that the mortgage cannot be foreclosed, because it is upon the homestead, and it does not appear that it was ever presented to the administratrix for allowance. For this proposition, with other cases, Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7, 21 Pac. 375, is cited for authority. In that case the court found "that there are not now, nor were there ever, any assets * * * that could be charged with or subject to the payment of said note or mortgage." But this court held that, nevertheless, claims secured by liens upon a homestead selected and recorded prior to the death of decedent must be presented as other claims against the estate. The constitution and the laws have created a special tribunal, to wit, the probate court, to marshal the assets of a deceased person, and to determine whether there are assets which can be applied to the payment of debts, and it may well be held that in a suit to foreclose a mortgage the superior court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the matter, however obvious the fact may be; but it does not seem to me that is necessarily so if the probate court has in the proceedings in the estate determined that there never had been in the estate assets which could be applied to the debt. It may be admitted that the legislature could make the requirement general and absolute in all cases. But are we authorized in attributing such a design to the legislature? is the question. Section 1469, Code Civ. Proc., authorizes the probate court in certain cases to assign the entire estate for the use and support of the family, subject to liens and incumbrances, and provides that there must be no further proceedings in the administration. In such case no notice to creditors could be given, and no claims could be presented for allowance. True, this provision may refer to liens upon property other than the homestead, but, if a portion of the property thus assigned happened to be a homestead, we cannot suppose that it was intended that a creditor should lose his debt for not doing an impossible act. Apparently this estate might have been assigned in that mode, and, in effect, it was, though, perhaps, not upon the return of the inventory. Whether notice to creditors was ever given does not appear, but the court first set apart for the family all of the personal property, and then set apart the homestead, which comprised all the balance of the estate. It does not appear that the plaintiff ever could have presented his claim. In such case I think we are not warranted in supposing that it was intended that the debt should be lost. But we are not put to the necessity of determining that question here, for it is not averred in the complaint that the homestead had been selected and declared prior to the death of J. R. Sweet, and there is no presumption that it was. A pleading is to be taken most strongly against the pleader, in that it must be held that a plaintiff has fully stated his cause of action; but this does not warrant us in presuming facts not averred at all. The averment is simply that the court set apart a homestead. If there was no other fact in reference to the matter, this was a probate homestead, and in such case a presentation of the mortgage was not required. McGahey v. Forrest, 109 Cal. 63, 41 Pac. 817. The action is not barred by the sections of the Code relied upon. The judgment is affirmed.

In re HUELSMAN'S ESTATE. (Sac. 537.)

EXECUTORS—HOMESTEAD—ACQUISITION—INCUMBRANCES—PAYMENT FROM DECEDENT'S PERSONAL ESTATE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, provides that, where a homestead has been selected and recorded during coverture, it shall be set off to the surviving spouse, and that, if there are incumbrances on the homestead, the claims secured thereby must be presented as other claims, and, if the estate is not sufficient to pay such claims, they shall be paid pro rata with other claims, and the incumbrances enforced as to the homestead only for the deficiency; and section 1544 provides that lands specifically devised shall not be sold for the payment of debts of a decedent's estate if there be sufficient other property out of which to pay such debts. The testator devised to his wife a one-half interest in a farm, which was his separate property, and which had never been set aside as a homestead. Subsequent to the making of the will the testator mortgaged the property; and after his death, but before expiration of the time for proving claims, on the widow's application, the court erroneously set aside the farm to the widow as a homestead, in fee, which decree was not appealed from. Held, that since the widow deraigned her title from the decree, and not the devise, and the homestead was not one recorded during coverture, she was not entitled to an order requiring the executors to discharge the mortgage from the funds of the estate.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

Application by the widow of Charles H. Huelsman for an order directing the executors of said decedent to discharge a mortgage lien on the homestead. From an order awarding the relief prayed for, the executors appeal. Reversed.

Holl & Dunn, for appellants. A. L. Bruner and Bruner Bros., for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order directing the executors of the above-entitled estate to pay off and discharge a mortgage lien on the probate homestead which had been set apart to the widow of the deceased. The deceased left a will in which he devised to his widow a one-half interest in a farm in Sacramento county, and also a one-half interest in the personal property on said farm. The remainder of his estate, with a trifling exception, was left to a daughter and son, children of a former wife. At the time the will was made, the farm, which was appraised at the value of $2,300, was unincumbered, but afterwards it was mortgaged by the deceased to secure the payment of $1,000. The entire estate was the separate property of the husband. Before the time for approving claims against the estate had expired, the court, upon application of the widow, set aside the whole farm as a homestead. The order so setting aside the homestead did not limit it to a life estate in the widow, but set it aside to her absolutely. This, of course, was erroneous; but the time to appeal from the order having expired, and no appeal having been taken, and the order, though erroneous, not being void, title in fee under the order vested in the widow. In re Moore's Estate, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584; Fealey v. Fealey, 104 Cal. 354, 38 Pac. 49; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 690, 46 Pac. 736. Notwithstanding the fact that the farm had been specifically devised, one half to the widow, the other half to the two children, it was competent for the probate court to set it aside as a homestead; for the right of a testator to devise is subordinate to the power in the probate court to sequester and set apart the property for the shelter, care, and support of the family. Sulzberger v. Sulzberger, 50 Cal. 385; In re Davis, 69 Cal. 458, 10 Pac. 671; In re Lahiff's Estate, 86 Cal. 151, 24 Pac. 850. Notwithstanding, then, the specific devise of one-half of the farm to the widow, her title to all of it is deraigned from the homestead order. The owner of the debt secured by the mortgage upon the farm never presented his claim against the estate. His recourse is therefore limited to the mortgaged property. Code Civ. Proc. § 1500; McGahey v. Forrest, 109 Cal. 63, 41 Pac. 817. The question thus presented is that of the power of the court to order the executors to discharge an incumbrance upon the probate homestead. Since the widow's title comes from the homestead order, and not from the devise, she is not in position to take advantage of the provisions of sections 1544 and 1563 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to the exemption of specific devises from the payment of the debts of an estate. We have looked in vain to find any law authorizing the court to discharge liens upon such a homestead. Where a homestead has been selected and recorded prior to the death of one of the spouses, section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes provision for the extinguishment of liens and incumbrances upon it, but section 1475 has to do exclusively with homesteads declared during the lifetime of the spouses. The law has not seen fit to make the same provision as to probate homesteads. Therefore, however beneficial may be the power which the court exercised in making the order in question, we are constrained to hold that it was unauthorized. The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: TEMPLE, J.; VAN DYKE, J.; HARRISON, J.

GAROUTTE, J. (concurring). If it appeared upon the face of the proceedings setting aside this property as a homestead that it was the separate property of the husband, then the order here made setting aside the property in fee as a homestead would be void,—at least, void as to any interest beyond a life estate; for the statute is the measure of the court's power in such a case, and the statute says the property may be set aside for a "limited period," and this court has declared that such limited period may not exceed a term for life. Hence an order would be void upon its face, to the extent, at least, of anything beyond a life estate, which purported to set aside separate property as a homestead in fee. But here we find nothing in the record of the proceedings for setting apart the homestead showing this property to be separate property, and, in support of the validity of the order made, we are bound to assume to the contrary. In the case of a probate homestead upon separate property set aside for a limited period,—for example, five years,—I see no legal objection to the court making an order that the general assets of the estate be applied to the satisfaction of a mortgage resting upon it, exactly the same as if it had not been set aside as a homestead. The fact that it is a homestead for a limited period is merely incidental to the main question, and the interests of the estate in such property may be protected by the satisfaction of a mortgage resting upon it. For the foregoing reasons, I concur in the judgment.

ATTACHMENTS AGAINST NATIONAL BANKS.

1. The amendment of March 3, 1873 (Rev. St. U. S. § 5242), to section 57 of the national banking act of June 3, 1864, providing that no attachment shall be issued against a national bank or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, etc., is mandatory, and applies to attachments issuing from state courts against such banks.

2. The amendment of March 3, 1873 (Rev. St. U. S. § 5242) to section 57 of the national banking act of June 3, 1864, providing that no attachment shall be issued against a national bank or its property before final judgment, is constitutional.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by B. H. Dennis against the First National Bank of Seattle, Wash., a corporation. From an order dissolving an attachment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dillon & Dunning, for appellant. Mulford & Pollard, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Appeal from order dissolving attachment. The complaint shows the defendant to be a corporation organized under the laws of the United States as a national bank. After the filing of the complaint and an affidavit on behalf of the plaintiff, a writ of attachment was issued, and placed in the hands of the sheriff. Defendant made a motion upon proper notice for an order dissolving the attachment upon the ground, among others, that the superior court was without jurisdiction to issue said writ, and that the same was improperly issued. By the amendment of March 3, 1873 (Rev. St. U. S. § 5242), to section 57 of the national banking act of June 3, 1864, an attachment cannot issue against a national bank before judgment. The amending act reads: "That section 57 * * * be amended by adding thereto the following: 'And provided further that no attachment, injunction or execution shall be issued against such association or its property before final judgment in any suit, action or proceeding or municipal court.'" The words used are plain and mandatory. The supreme court of the United States, in construing the statute in Bank v. Mixter, 124 U. S. 726, 8 Sup. Ct. 721, 31 L. Ed. 571, speaking through the chief justice, after reviewing all the statutes bearing upon the subject, said "that no attachment should issue from state courts against national banks, and all the attachment laws of the states must be read as if they contained a proviso in express terms that they were not to apply to suits against national banks." This case has since been followed, and the same construction placed upon the statute, by the state and federal courts without a single exception that has been brought to our knowledge. Garner v. Bank (C. C.) 66 Fed. 369; Safford v. Bank, 61 Vt. 373, 17 Atl. 748; Bank v. La Due, 39 Minn. 415, 40 N. W. 367; Bank of Montreal v. Fidelity Nat. Bank, 112 N. Y. 667, 20 N. E. 414; Rosenheim Real-Estate Co. v. Southern Nat. Bank (Tenn. Ch. App.) 46 S. W. 1026; Freeman Mfg. Co. of North Adams v. National Bank of the Republic, 160 Mass. 398, 35 N. E. 865.

The section is not unconstitutional. It is not claimed that the act of congress authorizing national banks is unconstitutional. If congress has power to authorize the creation of the national banks, it has power to protect them, and to regulate their trade and intercourse with others, by granting them special immunities, and protecting them against suits or proceedings in state courts by which their efficiency would be impaired. Chesapeake Bank v. First Nat. Bank of Baltimore, 40 Md. 269; Freeman Mfg. Co. of North Adams v. National Bank of the Republic, 160 Mass. 398, 35 N. E. 865.

The process of attachment under our Code is a creature of the statute. It has always been held that the legislature might provide, not only the cases in which an attachment might issue, but the classes of property upon which it might be levied. It has accordingly been held that money in the custody of the law is not the subject of attachment. This court has held that an act providing for the dissolution of attachments levied within two months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is constitutional. Baum v. Raphael, 57 Cal. 361. The legislature of this state has provided, among other things, that court houses, certain public buildings, and many classes of property shall be exempt from execution. It might provide that no attachment should issue in any case. We see no reason why the legislature of the nation has not the power to provide that no attachment shall issue against any bank created and existing under its authority. The order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

BAKER v. VARNEY et al. (WILLIAMS, Intervener. Sac. 567.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1900.)

APPEAL—PARTIES INJURED—EVIDENCE.

1. A party who is not injured by a judgment cannot be heard to complain on appeal from an order denying him a new trial.

2. Where an objection to testimony, which is admissible for some purposes, is general, the court's failure to limit it is not error if counsel do not ask that it be limited.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sutter county.

Action by G. W. Baker, as receiver, against Mabel Brett Varney and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial defendant Mabel Brett Varney appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. McKune and R. Platnauer, for appellant. Richard Belcher, for respondent. A. M. Johnson, for intervener and respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff brings this action, as receiver in the foreclosure suit brought by the intervener against defendant Ellwood Varney, to recover possession of certain live stock, claimed to be rents, issues, and profits of the mortgaged premises, for an accounting with defendants, and for an injunction to restrain defendants from disposing of said live stock or dividing the same among defendants, and for general relief. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendant Mabel Varney moved for a new trial, and appeals from the order denying her motion. There is no appeal by any other defendant, and no appeal from the judgment. Mabel Varney was made a defendant because she claimed to own the property the subject of the action. The court found that the property belonged to defendant Ellwood Varney, and that appellant at no time had any interest in it. A careful examination of the evidence convinces us that it justifies this finding. Whether the receiver was properly appointed, and could, under his appointment, take possession of and hold the rents, issues, and profits of the mortgaged land, and apply them to the payment of the mortgage debt, are questions which do not concern appellant in view of the finding referred to above. If the court erred in its conclusions, appellant was not injured, and hence cannot be heard to complain. This view of the matter makes it unnecessary to discuss the numerous interesting questions presented in the briefs.

The witness Smith was asked whether she heard Ellwood Varney say anything about the ownership of the live stock now claimed by his wife, Mabel, and, if so, what he said. Defendant Mabel Varney objected to the question as irrelevant and incompetent, and that what was said does not purport to be in presence of Mabel Varney, who claimed to own the live stock. The principal question of fact was whether the husband or the wife owned the property. When this testimony was offered, the husband had not testified in the case, and therefore it was not admissible to contradict or impeach him. Nor was it admissible as against his wife. It was only competent as a declaration affecting him and his rights, and should have been so limited by the court. The objection, however, was general, and, when made in that form, and the court failed to limit the application of the testimony, it was the duty of counsel to ask to have it so limited, since it was admissible for some purposes. What has been just said applies to the ruling made when plaintiff was called as a witness, and was asked to state a conversation he had with Ellwood Varney.

It appeared from the evidence that the receiver was awarded possession of the rents which had accrued prior to his appointment, and which had not as yet been paid over to Varney by the tenant, as well as rents accruing and to accrue after his appointment. We very much doubt his right to rents which had accrued prior to his appointment. But, as there is no appeal by Varney, or by any one other than Mrs. Varney, who the court found had no interest in or right to the property, the question need not be determined. Whatever may be the right of the receiver to the property, Mrs. Varney has none, and cannot be heard to complain of the judgment. If it be claimed that she got some right by the division of the rents made on October 17, 1896, referred to in the findings, it must rest upon the assumption that the cattle were hers when first purchased for the purpose of stocking the farm. But the court found, and the evidence justified the finding, that her husband was the real purchaser and owner at that time, and the court also found that it was community property, which is justified by the evidence, even though it be conceded that the property was purchased for her account. The evidence showed that it was paid for from the rents of the farm. In no view of the case can we see that appellant is personally concerned in or injured by the judgment. It is advised that the order denying the new trial be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying the new trial is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. McINTYRE. (Cr. 553.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1900.)

CRIMINAL LAW—COURT REPORTERS—QUALIFICATIONS—CERTIFICATE—VARIANCE—MATHEMATICALITY—WITNESSES—EVIDENCE AT FORMER TRIAL.

1. A certificate that a transcript of evidence contains a "full and complete record of the testimony" is a substantial compliance with Pen. Code, § 869, requiring the certificate to state that the transcript is a "correct statement of the testimony."

2. Where accused was charged with robbing a roommate in a hotel, and the evidence tending to show accused left the room at 5 o'clock in the morning, as claimed by him, is not in the record, a variance between the shorthand notes of the roommate's former testimony and the transcript thereof, leaving it in doubt whether witness retired at 7 o'clock or arose at that hour, will be treated as immaterial.

3. Code Civ. Proc. § 270, requiring official reporters to possess certain qualifications, refers to the official reporter of superior courts, and not to reporters authorized by Pen. Code, § 869, in hearings before magistrates.

4. Where accused was represented by counsel at his preliminary hearing, he cannot object for the first time on the trial that the reporter appointed to take testimony before the magistrate did not possess the necessary qualifications.

5. Where an officer serving a subpoena went to the hotel occupied by a witness, and was there told that he had left the state, and he then went to one of witness' haunts, and received the same reply, and to another, where he was informed that witness was liable to return at any time, and he made further efforts to locate him, without success, such showing was sufficient to authorize introduction of the witness' testimony on a former preliminary examination.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

George McIntyre was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George N. Smith, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. When the case was called for trial, the complaining witness failing to appear, the district attorney was permitted to read in evidence, against defendant's objection, the deposition of said witness given on the preliminary examination of defendant in the police court. The only question involved in this appeal is as to the correctness of this ruling.

1. It is objected that the transcript was not certified as required by law. Section 869, Pen. Code, provides: "The deposition or testimony of the witness must be authenticated in the following form: * * * When taken down in shorthand, the transcript of the reporter appointed as aforesaid, when written out in longhand writing and certified as being a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings in the case shall be prima facie a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings." The certificate in question reads: "I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true and correct transcript from the shorthand notes taken by me, and a full and complete record of the proceedings had and testimony given in the above-entitled case." While the stenographer was grossly careless in not consulting the statute when formulating his certificate to the transcript of the evidence, still, after careful consideration, the court has arrived at the conclusion that the certificate is made in substantial compliance with the form demanded by the statute. It is certified that the transcript contains a full and complete record of the testimony given in the cause. A complete record of the testimony of the witness may fairly be said to be a correct statement of his testimony.

2. When the deposition of the witness was being read, the defendant demanded a comparison of it with the shorthand notes. It was disclosed that the deposition was not a correct transcript of the reporter's notes in several particulars, and it was objected to for that reason. The only difference between the deposition and the notes of apparent significance related to what occurred at the hotel where the prosecuting witness had testified that he and defendant went to lodge on the night the larceny is alleged to have taken place. The two went together to this hotel, as it appears by the deposition. The witness was asked by the district attorney to give the exact text of his notes. "The witness: A. Yes, and we got a two-bed room there, and I went to my bed, and at seven o'clock I got up in the morning, and I missed my money." Counsel for defendant read from the transcript, addressing the witness: "Q. I will read it again, and I read the punctuation: 'Yes (comma), and we got a two-bed room (period). And I went to my bed at seven o'clock (period)'. And I got up in the morning and I missed my money.' Is that correct? A. That is not correct." The witness was asked if there was anything in his notes that he (the prosecuting witness) got up at 7 o'clock, to which he replied, "No, sir." The dispute seemed to be whether the witness had said he went to bed at 7 o'clock, or had said that he got up at 7 o'clock. Defendant contends that the fact was important, because there was evidence that the defendant left the room where he and the witness were sleeping at 5 o'clock in the morning. The evidence is not before us, and we cannot say whether the variance between the shorthand reporter's notes and the transcript of them was material to defendant's case. Whether the fact was that the prosecuting witness went to bed at 7 o'clock or got up at 7 o'clock may have been entirely immaterial, and, if material, the defendant should have embodied enough of the evidence in the record to show its materiality. Injury will not be presumed from error which on its face is harmless.

3. Appellant contends that the deposition was not taken by a reporter appointed according to law. Section 869, Pen. Code, provides that the magistrate before whom the examination is had "may * * * order the testimony and proceedings to be taken down in shorthand, * * * and for that purpose he may appoint a shorthand reporter." It is claimed that the magistrate may not, under this section, appoint except the appointee possesses the qualifications prescribed for official reporters of superior courts by chapter 3, tit. 4, Code Civ. Proc. Stress is laid upon section 270 of that Code, which provides that "no person shall be appointed to the position of official reporter of any court in this state, except," etc.,—then follow the prescribed qualifications. This chapter relates exclusively to the official reporter of superior courts. Id. § 269 et seq. Appellant would read these sections into section 869 of the Penal Code. We can find nothing in the provisions of the two Codes to warrant us in doing so. No doubt the legislature contemplated that the official reporter referred to in the civil procedure should possess certain qualifications, and so should a shorthand reporter called in by a magistrate be competent to do the work, for its importance is even greater than in civil cases; but the legislature nowhere in section 869 has intimated that the shorthand reporter there mentioned should be an official reporter of some superior court, or that he should possess the qualifications of some reporter. Furthermore, it appears that the defendant had an attorney present at the preliminary examination, who then made no objection to the reporter appointed by the magistrate. It must be presumed that he was satisfactory to the court and to the accused, and possessed the necessary qualifications; and when, therefore, at the trial, counsel asked the reporter (the witness) whether there had been a committee appointed to examine him, the court properly refused the question as immaterial. The time to test his qualifications and to object that he did not possess them was at the preliminary examination.

4. It is claimed that the showing was insufficient that the witness could not be found in the state. The officer who served the subpoena testified that he went to the hotel where Bertl, the prosecuting witness, stopped. "I went there, and inquired of the proprietor, who told me that Bertl was not stopping there; that he had left, and gone to Montana. Acting on information received, I went to a saloon near by, on Montgomery avenue, kept by Mr. Conti, and inquired for Bertl, and got the same reply,—that he had gone to Montana." He was then directed to inquire of a fellow countryman who kept a razor-sharpening place, who told the witness that he knew Bertl. "I asked him if he knew when Bertl would be back into town again. He said he could not say; that Bertl had some business in Sonoma county, and was liable to come at any time." He also testified to further efforts made by him, which resulted in a failure to locate the witness. The evidence discloses the showing to be sufficient. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

HENNE v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

(L. A. 760.)

TAXATION—MORTGAGES—DEDUCTION—PRESUMPTIONS.

1. Neglect or refusal of a landowner to return a mortgage on his land for taxation does not authorize the assessor to arbitrarily assess it to him, since Pol. Code, § 3629, requires the landowner to return only property belonging to himself; and section 3633, authorizing arbitrary assessment on refusal of the owner to make a statement, applies only to property belonging to him; and section 3650, subd. 15, requires the assessor to deduct mortgages and assess them to their owner.

2. Where the assessor fails to enter the value of mortgages on land assessed, in the proper column, and deduct the same, as required by Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 15, it cannot be presumed that he made the proper deductions, but failed to so state on the assessment roll.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by C. Henne against the county of Los Angeles. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

R. L. Horton, for appellant. J. C. Rines, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover certain taxes claimed to have been illegally exacted. Plaintiff alleges ownership of certain real estate situated in the city of Los Angeles; that said property was assessed for the fiscal year 1898-99 as of the value of $96,530; that at the time of said assessment there was a mortgage resting upon said property, executed by plaintiff to the regents of the University of California, for the sum of $35,000, no part of which had been paid, and that the same remained unpaid on the first Monday of March, 1898; that no deduction or credit was made or given plaintiff upon the assessment roll on account of said mortgage, and the assessor failed and refused to treat said mortgage as an interest in the property affected thereby, or to deduct the value of said mortgage security from the value of said property, but assessed the entire value thereof to plaintiff; that on July 23, 1898, plaintiff made a demand in writing upon the assessor that he correct said assessment by deducting from the value of said property assessed to plaintiff, and affected by said mortgage, the value of said mortgage, alleged to be $35,000; that the assessor refused; that thereafter, on November 3, 1898, plaintiff filed his verified petition before the board of supervisors of defendant county, requesting the said board to correct, or order to be corrected, on the assessment roll of said county, the assessment of plaintiff, by deducting from the value of said property assessed to plaintiff, and affected by said mortgage, the value of said security, and that said board denied said petition; that on November 19, 1898, plaintiff paid said taxes, amounting to $1,287.06, under a written protest addressed and delivered to the tax collector of said county, specifying therein the portion of said assessment claimed to be void, and the ground on which said claim was founded. Then follow allegations showing what was contained in said protest, which appears to have set out a copy of the assessment as shown by the assessment roll, a copy of which is found in the complaint, and specifically setting forth the facts as above. The alleged offer was, upon failure to grant the deduction claimed, to pay the whole of said tax under protest, "under and by virtue of the provisions contained in section 3819, Pol. Code." The alleged excess payment amounted to $466.66%. It is alleged that on November 21, 1898, plaintiff presented his verified demand in writing upon the treasury of the county, to said board of supervisors, which was rejected by the board January 5, 1899, and that no part of said claim has been paid. Defendant demurred to the complaint on several grounds. The only ground now urged is insufficiency of facts. Defendant had judgment of dismissal on the demurrer, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

Under the provisions of section 4, art. 13, of the constitution of this state, and subdivision 15 of section 3650 of the Political Code, it was the obvious duty of the assessor to deduct the amount of the mortgage held by the regents of the university from the assessed valuation of the land, the subject of the mortgage. Hollister v. Sherman, 63 Cal. 38; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 77 Cal. 136, 19 Pac. 257. In effect, plaintiff was assessed, not only on his own property, but upon that of the mortgagee. To the extent that plaintiff's assessment was increased by the assessor's failure to deduct the amount for which the mortgage was assessable, the assessment was void, and may be recovered back, under section 3819 of the Political Code. Respondent does not dispute the liability as a general proposition, but it contends that, because the complaint does not allege that plaintiff made to the assessor the statement required by section 3629, such neglect subjected plaintiff to the arbitrary assessment provided for by section 3633. Section 3629 provides that the assessor "must exact from each person a statement, under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such person," etc. In six separate paragraphs are pointed out the facts required to be shown by the statement. They are all designed to compel from the taxpayer a disclosure of the taxable property owned by him, not taxable property owned by some other person. Paragraph 5 makes it the duty of the owner of mortgages, deeds of trust, etc., to return the same. It is not made the duty of the owner of the mortgaged land to return the mortgages held by his mortgagee. Section 3630 makes provision for blank forms for statements mentioned in section 3629. Section 3631 provides that "the assessor may fill out the statement at the time he presents it, or he may deliver it to the person and require him, within an appointed time, to return the same to him, properly filled out." Section 3632 gives the assessor power to require every person found within his county to subscribe an affidavit, giving his name and residence; to subpoena and examine any person in relation to any statement furnished to him; and, under certain restrictions, a refusal to make the statement required by law, or to appear or to make the affidavit above referred to, may for each refusal work a forfeiture of $100 to the people of the state. Section 3633 provides that "if any person, after demand made by the assessor, neglects or refuses to give, under oath, the statement herein provided for," etc., the assessor must estimate the value of the property of the person so refusing, and transmit the same to the board of supervisors, with a statement of the facts. The board must thereupon require each taxpayer affected by such assessment to make a statement under oath, etc., and if any taxpayer, after demand, shall neglect or refuse to deliver to the board the statement provided for under oath, etc., the board, sitting as a board of equalization, "must increase such assessment and valuation to such an amount as the said board shall deem just; but the value fixed by the assessor must not, in any case, be reduced by the board of supervisors." Section 3650 provides that the assessor "must prepare an assessment book * * * in which must be listed all the property within the county, under the appropriate head: 1. The name of the person to whom the property is assessed." Then follow numerous subdivisions designating the various kinds of property, real and personal. "15. When any property, * * * is subject to or affected by a mortgage, deed of trust, contract or other obligation by which a debt is secured, he [the assessor] must enter in the proper column the value of such security, and deduct the same," etc. Section 3627 provides: "* * * In case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, * * * less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof," etc. Section 3678 provides: "To assist the assessor in the performance of his duties, the recorder must annually transmit to the assessor, * * * a complete abstract of all mortgages * * *. Such abstract shall be written under appropriate headings, to embrace all information requisite for the assessor," etc.

It is claimed by respondent that the property owner who fails to make the statement under section 3629 is in no position to complain of any error the assessor may make unless the assessment is void upon its face; citing City and County of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 2 Pac. 264; Orena v. Sherman, 61 Cal. 101. It is also claimed that it is the duty of the taxpayer to disclose to the assessor the nature and amount of the mortgage secured by his land, failing in which he cannot be heard to complain, and the assessor may make the arbitrary assessment contemplated by section 3633. Orena v. Sherman is very briefly reported, but I think it sufficiently appears to be a case where the assessor had demanded a statement under section 3629, and the taxpayer had refused to make it. In City and County of San Francisco v. Flood the question was whether the term "mining stock" was a good description of personal property. Respondent relies upon the following remarks in the opinion: "If the description was taken from a list furnished by the defendant, * * * he ought not to be heard to complain of the insufficiency of the description. If made by the assessor without the aid of such list, the assessor has given a description as certain as could reasonably be required of him, and under such circumstances the defendant's objection to the assessment should be disregarded." The case goes no further than to hold that, where the description is intelligible, the taxpayer cannot complain if he has failed to make the statement mentioned in the statute. It does not decide, nor was the question involved, that the taxpayer who neglects to make a statement is conclusively bound in all respects by the statement made out by the assessor. We do not think the assessor is authorized to make an arbitrary assessment under section 3633 except upon the neglect or refusal of the taxpayer to give the statement "after demand made by the assessor." The statute plainly so declares. There is no question here of overvaluation of plaintiff's property, and an appeal by plaintiff to the board of equalization would not have resulted in reducing the assessed valuation of his land; for he did not, and does not, complain of the valuation. The board would have had the power to direct the assessor "to enter upon the assessment book any property which has not been assessed" (section 3679), which would have included the mortgage in question; but, in this case had the board so directed, the mortgage, which was omitted from the assessment book, could not have been taxed, as it was state property. Hollister v. Sherman, supra. And the board of equalization is nowhere given authority to direct the assessor to enter on the assessment book the value of any security resting upon land which is taxed, and deduct the same from the assessed value of the land. That is a duty directly devolved upon the assessor, which we think the taxpayer has a right to presume has been performed or will be performed, whether the taxpayer makes a statement or not. If the assessor should demand a statement, the law only requires the taxpayer to include therein all his taxable property; and an omission on his part to call attention to a mortgage resting upon his land would not relieve the assessor from discharging his duty, which is to assess the land to its owner at its value, and to assess the mortgage thereon to the holder, and deduct the value of the mortgage from the value of the land as assessed. It is the duty of the assessor to enter the facts upon the assessment of the owner of the land. Knott v. Peden, 84 Cal. 299, 24 Pac. 160. There is no power given the assessor by section 3633 to arbitrarily assess the mortgage to the owner of the land, by way of penalty or otherwise, nor to refuse or neglect to deduct it from the value of the land, because the landowner has omitted to make a statement, or to do so even where he has refused, upon demand, to make a statement. The assessor may in the latter case fix his own valuation on the land, but he must also deduct therefrom the value of the mortgage, and assess it to the holder.

It cannot be presumed, as respondent urges, that the assessor has actually made the proper deductions, although he failed to so state on the assessment roll. The law requires the assessor to enter the value of the security in the proper column for such entry, and deduct the same. The copy of the assessment set out in the complaint shows that there was an appropriate column for such an entry, but the assessor failed to enter therein the value of the security, or make any deduction on account of it. There was no excuse for this, for he is furnished by the county with a list of all mortgages. So far from his being protected by a presumption that he discharged his duty, the complaint shows a plain neglect of duty.

If the assessor willfully omits to assess a mortgage, he is liable on his bond for the taxes (section 3660); and, if the mortgage escapes taxation, it may be doubly taxed the following year, if still owned by the same person (section 3649). But, while these provisions are intended to protect the tax fund, they do not relieve the mortgagor, who has not received the benefit of the deduction. If he pays his tax under protest, in compliance with the provisions of section 3819, he may recover back the tax paid by him upon the amount of the mortgage which he was entitled to have deducted from the assessment against his land. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

McFARLAND, J. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

TEMPLE, J. I concur in the judgment solely upon the ground that the taxpayer is not subjected to the penalty of a so-called arbitrary assessment for failure to furnish to the assessor a list of his taxable property unless such list has first been demanded by the assessor. It does not appear in this case that such a list was demanded. I do not concur in the apparent intimation that, though such list has been demanded, the taxpayer could complain if he did not furnish a list which would show the mortgages to which the property is subject. If the list does not show the mortgages, in my opinion, it would not constitute such a list of his taxable property as is required. If the opinion can be understood as holding that only when the taxpayer has failed to return a list is the assessor entitled to value the property, or change values made by the taxpayer, I also dissent from that view. In my opinion, it is always the duty of the assessor to value the property for himself, and that in all cases he not only may, but should, refuse to be bound by the valuations made by the taxpayer. I doubt the propriety of the term "arbitrary assessment." See People v. National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., 123 Cal. 55, 55 Pac. 685.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 965, providing that, when an administrator who has given an official bond appeals from a judgment affecting his estate, his bond shall stand in lieu of an appeal bond, does not exempt a former special administratrix who had resigned prior to her taking the appeal.

2. An administrator who invokes an order accepting his resignation and appointing his successor cannot complain that the order was made before his accounts were settled.

3. A surety on an administrator's bond, who is not a party to a judgment against his principal, cannot appeal therefrom, since he is not a party aggrieved, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Judicial accounting of Carrie McDermott, special administratrix of the estate of William McDermott, deceased. From an order disallowing her account, she and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, a surety on her bond, appeal. Dismissed.

Miller & Brown and A. J. Sherer, for appellants. Z. Montgomery, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The transcript shows two appeals,—one by Carrie McDermott, who was at one time the special administratrix of the estate of William McDermott, deceased, and the other by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, a corporation, claiming to have been surety on a bond of said Carrie as such special administratrix; and the case is now before the court on a motion to dismiss said appeals. The appeals are from an order of the lower court made June 23, 1899, disallowing an account of said Carrie as such administratrix.

There is no bill of exceptions as provided for in rule 29 of this court, and no attempt to otherwise identify the papers and evidence used on the hearing of the motion in the court below, and therefore one of the grounds of the motion to dismiss, applicable to both appeals, is want of a properly authenticated record on appeal; but we do not deem it necessary to determine whether in this particular case the defect in the record is ground for dismissing the appeals, or whether it would only have been ground for affirming the judgment had the whole case been submitted, because we think that each appeal must be dismissed upon other grounds stated in the motion.

One of the grounds for dismissing the appeal of Carrie McDermott is that she gave no undertaking on appeal. The fact that she gave no such undertaking is admitted; but she contends that her bond as special administratrix stands in lieu of an undertaking on appeal, under section 965, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that when an executor, administrator or guardian, who has given an official bond appeals from a judgment or order made in proceedings had in the estate of which "he is the executor, administrator or guardian," his official bond shall stand in the place of an undertaking on appeal. But when this appeal was taken the said appellant was not the administratrix of said estate. On June 13, 1899, she filed her written resignation as administratrix, and in said resignation requested that C. G. Kellogg, public administrator, be appointed special administrator of the estate. On the same day Kellogg filed his petition for appointment as special administrator, in which he stated that appellant Carrie, who was the widow of the deceased, requested his appointment; and on the next day, June 14th, the court appointed Kellogg as such administrator. This appeal was not taken until August 17, 1899, more than two months after she had resigned, and her successor had been appointed at her request. The covenants of an administrator's bond do not make it, on its face, an undertaking on appeal, and it becomes such, under certain circumstances, only by virtue of the provision of said section 965; and, as a surety always stands strictly on the terms of his contract, he cannot be charged by virtue of the section of the Code relied on unless he be within its strict terms. But the Code provision covers only the case of an appeal taken by one who at the time of the appeal is administrator, and does not include a case where the appealing party is not an administrator. Nor are we called upon to examine the point, now made here by appellant, based upon section 1427, Id., that the action of the court in accepting her resignation and appointing her successor before her accounts had been settled was erroneous or invalid. Having herself invoked that action by the court, she cannot now be heard to assail it. For the foregoing reasons, her appeal must be dismissed.

2. The appeal of the Fidelity & Deposit Company must be dismissed because it is not a "party aggrieved," who has a right to appeal within the meaning of section 938, Code Civ. Proc. It bases its right to appeal upon the fact that it was surety on the bond of the other appellant, Carrie. The transcript does not really show, by anything that is properly a part of the record on this appeal, that said company was surety on said bond; but, if we assume that to be a fact, it has still no standing here as an appellant. A surety, merely as such, has no right to appeal from a judgment against the principal. In order to be entitled to an appeal under the section of the Code above referred to, a person must have been a party to the action or proceeding in the court below. This does not mean that he must have been an original party when the action or proceeding was first instituted, but he must have made himself a party afterwards by some appropriate action, and the record must show that he was such a party. This is the general rule, and this case is not an exception. Hayne, New Trials & App. § 203, and cases there cited; In re Ryer's Estate, 110 Cal. 556, 42 Pac. 1082. In the case at bar this appellant did not seek to intervene or to appear in any way in the court below before the decision from which he seeks to appeal, nor did he afterwards move to set aside or in any way attack the order. The transcript contains a copy of what is called a "petition in intervention" made by the appellant after the order appealed from, in which it prays "that it be permitted to intervene in the above court and cause, and become a party thereto, for the purpose of appeal from said order to the supreme court of the state of California, and that it be permitted to so appeal"; and there also appears in the transcript what purports to be a copy of an order of the court giving permission to file the intervention, "and to appeal from the order of the superior court," etc. It can hardly be gravely claimed that this petition and order are authenticated parts of the record on this appeal; but, even if they could be so considered, there can be no intervention after trial and judgment, and an order of the court below allowing the appeal has no significance whatever. The motion to dismiss said two appeals is granted, and both said appeals are hereby dismissed.

PEOPLE ex rel. BARKER v. SHAVER.
(L. A. 749.)

SUPERVISOR — ELECTION — NOTICE — FORFEITURE — OFFICIAL BOND — TIME FOR FILING — VACANCY.

Pol. Code, pt. 3, tit. 2, c. 11, provides for the canvass of election returns by the board of supervisors. Section 1284 provides that the county clerk, on the result of the election being ascertained by the supervisors, shall deliver to the successful candidates certificates of election.

Section 907 provides that the oath of office of a supervisor must be subscribed and filed within 10 days after he has notice of his election, or within 15 days from the commencement of his term of office, when no such notice has been given. Respondent was re-elected to the office of supervisor, and, as chairman of the board, signed the minutes of that body so certifying. The term to which he was elected began on the 1st day of January, 1899. Prior thereto he filed an official oath and bond. The bond was void. The county clerk had never issued a notice of election to respondent. Within 15 days after the commencement of his term, respondent executed and filed a sufficient bond. Held that, though a member of the canvassing board, he was entitled to notice from the clerk, and his abortive attempt to file a bond and oath of office did not work a forfeiture of his right thereto; and hence, a sufficient bond having been filed within 15 days after the commencement of the term, there was no vacancy in the office, to which the governor could appoint another.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Riverside county.

Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto in the name of the people, on the relation of one Barker, against John Shaver, to determine the title to the office of supervisor of the Fifth district of Riverside county. From a judgment in favor of respondent, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, W. C. Van Fleet, and John G. North, for appellant. Purington & Adair and Thos. H. Parteone, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action is prosecuted, under section 803 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have it declared that the defendant unlawfully holds and exercises the office of supervisor of the Fifth supervisor district of Riverside county, and that the relator, Barker, is entitled to the office. The facts are not in dispute. They are the following: The defendant was elected to the office at the general election in 1898. At that time he was a supervisor and the chairman of the board of supervisors of the county. As required by law, the board canvassed the returns of the election, and entered the result in its minutes. Shaver presided as chairman of the board, participated in the canvass, and in the action of the board declaring the result, and signed the minutes of the board to that effect. On November 21, 1898, with the purpose and intent of qualifying for the office, he executed and filed an official bond in which it was declared that he had been elected to the office. The bond was insufficient and void. He did not take the oath of office until December 24, 1898, on which date, with the same purpose and intent to qualify for the office of supervisor, he took the oath of office; and on December 26, 1898, it was filed in the office of the county clerk. The new term of office commenced upon the — day of January, 1899. Thereafter, on January 5, 1899, Shaver executed and filed an official bond sufficient in form, and took and filed his official oath of office, which was attached to the bond. On March 7, 1899, the governor appointed the relator to fill the vacancy caused by the failure of the defendant to file his official oath and bond within the time required by law. The relator made and filed his official oath and bond within 10 days after his appointment. Upon these facts, judgment passed for Shaver. Upon this appeal it is contended that upon the face of the record it is made to appear that Shaver had actual notice of his election sufficient to meet the requirements of section 907 of the Political Code; that thereupon it became incumbent upon him, under the provision of that section, to take, subscribe, and file his oath of office within 10 days; that this, admittedly, Shaver failed to do, or, if it was not his duty to act under the notice, still, by acting as evidenced by his abortive attempt to file an undertaking and oath of office, he waived any right which he might otherwise have had to any other notice, and is bound by the result of his own conduct; that in either aspect of the case he forfeited his right to the office to which he had been elected, and a vacancy therein existed, to which the relator was duly appointed, and for which he had duly qualified; that the judgment of the trial court should therefore be reversed, and it should be directed to enter a judgment upon the admitted facts in favor of the relator.

Chapter 11, tit. 2, pt. 3, of the Political Code deals with the canvass of returns in elections, provides for a meeting of the supervisors for that purpose, for the mode of making the canvass, for the entering of the result in their minutes, with a declaration of the names of the persons elected. Section 1284 of the Political Code then provides, "The county clerk must immediately make out and deliver to such person * * * a certificate of election signed by him and authenticated with the seal of the superior court." Section 907 of the Political Code provides: "Whenever a different time is not prescribed by law, the oath of office must be taken and subscribed and filed within ten days after the officer has notice of his election or appointment, or before the expiration of fifteen days from the commencement of his term of office when no such notice has been given." The notice here contemplated and provided for is the notice contained in the certificate of election required to be delivered by the county clerk. People v. Perkins, 85 Cal. 512, 26 Pac. 245. Each officer elect is entitled to receive such notice, and actual knowledge will not supply the place of it. The requirement that the county clerk shall issue a certificate, and thus bring notice home to the successful candidate, is something more than a provision designed for his private advantage, and which may therefore be waived by him at pleasure. It is the mode prescribed for the orderly announcement of the result of an election, and is as much a part of the machinery of the election as are the provisions for the canvassing of the returns and the registration of the result. All are parts of the same scheme, and all are based upon considerations of public policy. State v. Meder (Nev.) 38 Pac. 669; People v. North, 72 N. Y. 128. No potency attaches to the circumstance that Shaver was chairman of the board of supervisors and signed the minutes, so that, as appellant states, it appears of record that he had notice of the result. The records of the board of supervisors were not designed to charge any person with notice of the result of the election, and should not be held to do so in the case of a member of the board of supervisors, any more than in the case of any other officer elect whose interest and curiosity might prompt him to read them. Each officer was entitled to the notice provided for by law, and could rest secure until such notice was given. Shaver's attempt, admittedly abortive, to anticipate this notice by filing a bond and oath of office, should not be held to work a forfeiture of his right. The notice not having been given, it became the duty of Shaver, under section 907 of the Political Code, to qualify before the expiration of 15 days from the commencement of his term; and this, admittedly, he did. It resulted therefrom that there was no vacancy in the office. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

MILLER et al. v. CARLISLE et al. (Sac. 584.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)
MECHANICS' LIENS—SEVERAL CLAIMANTS—JOINT ACTION—PERSONAL JUDGMENT—RENDITION—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT.

1. Where a mechanics' lien is defeated in an action to enforce the same in the superior court, it cannot render a personal judgment in favor of the claimant for a sum less than $300, its minimum jurisdiction under Const. art. 6, § 5.

2. Where several mechanics' lien claimants join in an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1195, in the superior court, a personal judgment rendered, where their liens are defeated, must be several in favor of each plaintiff, where there is no evidence of a joint debt; and hence the demands cannot be aggregated to give the court jurisdiction to render judgment where each separate claim falls below the amount required by Const. art. 6, § 5.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Butte county.

Action by William T. Miller and others against J. O. Carlisle and others. There was a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Carlisle appeals from an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

Hudson Grant, for appellant. Warren Sexton, for respondents.

BRITT, C. The plaintiffs, five in number, united in this action to enforce their several alleged liens for labor done by them, respectively, upon certain mining ground at the instance of the defendants Carlisle and Boggs. Such liens are asserted in virtue of the statute relating to liens of mechanics and others upon real property (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 et seq.). The demand of each plaintiff is set forth in a separate count of the complaint, and the sum claimed is in each instance less than $300, though the aggregate of the several claims is above $1,100. After trial the court below made findings declaring, among other things, that "the liens of plaintiffs do not attach to said land," but that there is due to the plaintiffs from the defendants Carlisle and Boggs personally the sum of $652. Judgment against said defendants was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiffs jointly. Carlisle moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he has appealed from the order made in that behalf.

The statute pertaining to this subject provides that "any number of persons claiming liens may join in the same action, and when separate actions are commenced the court may consolidate them." Code Civ. Proc. § 1195. Under the constitution (article 6, § 5) the superior court has no jurisdiction in cases at law for the recovery of pecuniary demands below $300 in amount; and the appellant insists that since the plaintiffs failed to establish their liens, and the sums of money claimed by them being severally less than $300, the court should have refused to consider any evidence of the personal liability of defendants, for the reason that the claims against them personally were not within the jurisdiction. The matter is of some importance, since claims of the class here involved are very commonly for less than $300, and the holders must proceed in the superior court to enforce their liens if they proceed for that purpose at all. It is convenient that the jurisdiction to enforce the personal liability of any defendant, although the lien fails, should be upheld in such cases, if the constitution permits. We regret that we have not been favored with a brief presenting the views of respondents on the question.

The cumulation of the several claims in one action we take to be a false quantity in the case. If the court has no jurisdiction to render personal judgment under such circumstances on one demand less than $300 in amount, then the aggregation of any number of similar, but independent, demands of different plaintiffs cannot confer jurisdiction; for, of course, the judgment, if rendered, must be several in favor of each plaintiff. The cases of Larrieux v. Slaughter-House Co., 30 La. Ann. 609, and Railroad Co. v. Hopkins, 33 La. Ann. 806, explained somewhat in Succession of Justus, 47 La. Ann. 304, 16 South. 841, are much in point; and see Derby v. Stevens, 64 Cal. 287, 30 Pac. 820; Thomas v. Anderson, 58 Cal. 99. If, then, Miller, for instance, had sued alone to enforce the lien claimed for the amount due him from defendants, which he alleged to be the sum of $208.50, and which the court found to be $158.80, the question is whether the court had power, the lien being defeated, to render judgment against defendants personally for the latter sum. It is in the exercise of its jurisdiction in equity that the superior court entertains suits to enforce the liens of mechanics and others provided for in the present statute. Curnow v. Gravel Co., 68 Cal. 262, 9 Pac. 149; Brock v. Bruce, 5 Cal. 279. In those courts where the sphere of equity remains distinct from that of law, if a complainant fails to establish at the trial the allegations of his bill which on their face appear to entitle him to some equitable relief, the rule is to dismiss his suit, although he may prove also that he has a demand cognizable at law; the reason being that the court is without jurisdiction to proceed further. Accordingly, in a suit in a federal circuit court to foreclose a mortgage made to secure a promissory note, the proof at the trial showed that the mortgage was invalid, and it was held that the court, sitting in equity, had no power to render judgment for the sum due on the note, and should dismiss the bill without prejudice. Dowell v. Mitchell, 105 U. S. 430, 26 L. Ed. 1142. To similar effect are Kramer v. Cohn, 119 U. S. 355, 7 Sup. Ct. 277, 30 L. Ed. 439; Rose v. West, 50 Ga. 474; Gamage v. Harris, 79 Me. 531, 11 Atl. 422, and cases cited; Daniell, Ch. Prac. (6th Am. Ed.) pp. *555, *630, and notes. Of course, that rule can have no general application under our system, where law and equity are amalgamated and administered in but one form of action, and in the same tribunal. With us it is nothing uncommon to render judgment for money due to the lien claimant from a defendant personally liable to him, although the lien itself fails of enforcement. Lumber Co. v. Priet, 113 Cal. 291, 45 Pac. 336; Lacore v. Leonard, 45 Cal. 394; Boisot, Mech. Liens, § 653. But in no such instance to which our observation has extended did it appear that the pecuniary demand involved was less than the court had jurisdiction to consider in an action founded on that alone; and the rule in equity illustrated by Dowell v. Mitchell, and other cases above cited, is certainly not more peremptory than the provision of the constitution which forbids the superior court to take cognizance of an action at law to recover money less than $300 in amount. We must hold, therefore, that, since the right of the superior court to entertain the present action arose solely from the incident of the liens and the foreclosure asked, then, on proof and findings at the trial that no lien existed, the court was without jurisdiction to give judgment for money against the defendants.

We do not overlook the principle that in ordinary legal actions the so-called ad damnum clause of the complaint, when stated in good faith (Fix v. Sissung [Mich.] 21 Am. St. Rep. 616, and note [s. c. 47 N. W. 340]) affords the test of jurisdiction, and if the amount equals or exceeds $300 the superior court obtains jurisdiction, and may render judgment for any lesser sum the evidence may justify (Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 653). In such case, however, the money demand is the substantive ground of jurisdiction, and the relief allowed does not differ in kind from that prayed for. It is the larger demand which is litigated, not alone the part of it which is recovered. But in the present case the sum of money involved is not the substantive ground on which the jurisdiction of the superior court rests in any degree. The jurisdiction must be supported, if at all, on a mere incident of the debts claimed by the plaintiffs respectively, viz. the lien and the equitable remedy of foreclosure; and since the lien fails, and the court can administer no equitable relief whatever, it must logically follow that the residue of the action—a dispute concerning money less than $300 in amount—can no longer engage the attention of the court. It may be added that there was no evidence of any indebtedness of the defendants to the plaintiffs jointly. The finding of the court on which followed the judgment that plaintiffs together recover the sum of $652 was therefore without support. The order denying a new trial should be reversed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order denying a new trial is reversed.

BLYTHE v. HINCKLEY. (S. F. 1,548.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1900.)
STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—RIGHT OF ALIEN TO TAKE LAND—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. Since Civ. Code, § 671, declaring that any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within the state, is not in conflict with the provisions of any treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and is not an invasion of the treaty-making powers of the government, a nonresident British subject may inherit land in the state.

2. Since Const. art. 1, § 17, declaring that foreigners of the white race or of African descent, eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, while bona fide residents of this state, shall have the same rights in respect to the acquisition, transmission, and inheritance of property as native-born citizens, is not a limitation on the right of the legislature to extend similar privileges to other foreigners or aliens, Civ. Code, § 671, providing that any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within the state, is not in conflict therewith.

3. Since Civ. Code, § 671, providing that any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold, and dispose of property, real or personal, within the state, confers a right to be enjoyed within the state, it is operative to cast descent on a nonresident alien.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Boswell M. Blythe against Florence Blythe Hinckley. From a judgment in favor of defendant on a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. W. & E. B. Holladay (L. D. McKisick, of counsel), for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Garber, Boalt & Bishop, and W. W. Foote (A. R. Cotton, of counsel), for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The purpose of this action was to recover from defendant certain land in the city and county of San Francisco. Plaintiff claims as an heir at law of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased. Without setting forth in detail the matters charged, it will be sufficient to say that the complaint pleads the proceedings and the judgments of the superior and supreme courts of this state, under which it was decreed that Thomas H. Blythe had instituted Florence Blythe (now Florence Blythe Hinckley) as heir, and the subsequent decree of the court distributing the property in question to her. The facts and the judgment to which reference has thus been made will be found at length in the action entitled "Florence Blythe v. Abbie Ayres et al." (96 Cal. 532, 31 Pac. 915, 19 L. R. A. 40). It is contended by this bill that the judgments of the superior court and of this court so decreeing are absolutely void, and that plaintiff, as one of the heirs at law of Thomas H. Blythe, deceased, should have judgment to that effect. A general demurrer was sustained to this bill, and plaintiff, declining to amend, appeals from the judgment thereupon entered against him.

In support of the complaint it is urged that Florence Blythe at the time of descent cast was an alien and British subject, who had never been within the jurisdiction of the United States or of the state of California, and that the state of California had and has no power to extend to such nonresident aliens the right to inherit real estate within its territorial domain, in the absence of a treaty provision to that effect between the United States and the country of such alien; that sections 230 and 1387 of the Civil Code, as applied to the case of such a nonresident alien, are without effect; that section 671 of the Civil Code is in violation of section 10 of article 1 of the constitution of the United States, which declares that "no state shall enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation," and is in violation of section 17 of article 1 of the constitution of the state of California, which, it is argued, limits the right of succession to the classes designated in the following language: "Foreigners of the white race or of African descent eligible to become citizens of the United States under the naturalization laws thereof, while bona fide residents of this state, shall have the same rights in respect to the acquisition, possession, enjoyment, transmission and inheritance of property as native born citizens."

It has been affirmed and reaffirmed in the decisions of the supreme court of the United States that the question of the possession, enjoyment, and inheritance of property is the proper subject-matter of treaty by resident or nonresident aliens. Thus, to employ but one quotation, in Geoffroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642, it is said (page 266, 133 U. S., and page 296, 10 Sup. Ct., and page 645, 33 L. Ed.): "That the treaty power of the United States extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our government and the governments of other nations is clear. It is also clear that the protection which should be afforded to the citizens of one country owning property in another, and the manner in which that property may be transferred, devised, or inherited, are fitting subjects for such negotiation, and of regulation by mutual stipulations between the two countries." This principle was early recognized in this state in the case of People v. Gerke, 5 Cal. 381. It need scarcely be said that at common law an alien was not of inheritable blood, and that disability still attaches in this state, saving where it has been removed by express law. By section 671 of our Civil Code it is declared that "any person, whether citizen or alien, may take, hold and dispose of property, real or personal, within this state." Here is an express removal of the disability to which we have referred, and, if it be a valid law, it is determinative of appellant's contention. It is conceded that the treaties between Great Britain and this country are silent upon the subject. We are not, then, confronted with the case of a state law in declared conflict with the provision of a treaty, in which instances it is, of course, uniformly held that the treaty is the paramount law. Opel v. Shoup, 100 Iowa, 407, 69 N. W. 560, 37 L. R. A. 583; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642; Orr v. Hodgson, 4 Wheat. 453, 4 L. Ed. 613. But by appellant it is insisted that the very silence of our treaties with Great Britain upon the question is the equivalent of an express denial to its subjects of the right to inherit within our republic, and that therefore a conflict arises, and section 671 becomes void, as an illegal attempt to encroach upon the treaty-making power of the general government. But this view, we think, finds little favor either in principle or in authority. A state has the undoubted right to regulate the tenure and disposition of the real property within its boundaries, and such regulations always have been and should be held valid except where they conflict with the express provisions of a higher law. Thus, in U. S. v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. Ed. 192, it is said: "The power of the state to regulate the tenure of real property within her limits, and the modes of its acquisition and transfer, and the rules of its descent, and the extent to which a testamentary disposition of it may be exercised by its owners, is undoubted. It is an established rule of law everywhere recognized, arising from the necessity of the case, that the disposition of immovable property, whether by deed, descent, or any other mode, is exclusively subject to the government within whose jurisdiction the property is situated." See, also, Investment Co. v. Caldwell, 152 U. S. 65, 14 Sup. Ct. 504, 38 L. Ed. 356; Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. Ed. 1168; Beard v. Rowan, 9 Pet. 301, 9 L. Ed. 135. And this right to regulate the tenure and disposition of real property within its boundaries is not only in the state, but it is primarily in the state (Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628), and is subject only to such control as may be exercised by the general government within its treaty-making power. Therefore it will be found that the supreme court of the United States nowhere declares state laws upon the subject to be void as an invasion of the treaty-making power, but uniformly upholds the laws when not in conflict with the express provisions of a treaty, as in the case of Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 156, 7 Sup. Ct. 147, 30 L. Ed. 396, where the question was of the right of an alien subject of Great Britain to inherit, and the court held that the laws of Texas governing the rights of aliens to inherit property in that state were of controlling force. And, even in those cases where there is a conflict between the provisions of the state law and those of the treaty, it is not held that the state laws are void as an unwarranted interference with or encroachment upon the powers of the federal government. It is held merely that such laws, in so far as they conflict with the treaty provisions, are suspended during the life of the treaty. Thus, in Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 Sup. Ct. 295, 33 L. Ed. 642,—the question being as to the effect of the provisions of a treaty with France upon the laws of Maryland which were in operation in the District of Columbia,—it is said: "The treaty, being part of the supreme law of the land, controls the statute and common law of Maryland whenever it differs from them. * * * The treaty expired by its own limitation in eight years, pursuant to an article inserted by the senate. During its continuance citizens of France could take property in the District of Columbia by inheritance from citizens of the United States, but after its expiration that right was limited as provided by the statute and common law of Maryland." It is concluded, therefore, upon this proposition that the sections of our Civil Code which have been under consideration are not in conflict with the provisions of any treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and are not an invasion of the treaty-making powers of the United States government.

The argument that section 671 is inoperative to cast descent upon defendant, for the reason that the laws of the state can have no extra-territorial force, seems to be fully answered by the language of this court in State v. Smith, 70 Cal. 153, 12 Pac. 121, where it is said, discussing this very section: "It is suggested that, inasmuch as laws can have no extra-territorial operation, the legislature has no power to provide for succession by foreigners who had never been residents, but the section of the Code provides a rule with respect to property within the state. It confers a right to be enjoyed within the jurisdiction."

The further contention that section 671 of the Civil Code is void because in conflict with section 17 of article 1 of the constitution of the state of California rests for its support upon the argument that the language of the constitution is a limitation upon the power of the legislature. But to give it such an interpretation would be to do violence to fundamental rules of construction. By section 17, foreigners of the indicated classes may not be deprived of the rights which the constitution secures to them. But there is in this no withdrawal from the legislature of its general powers, nor any limitation upon its right to extend similar privileges to other foreigners or aliens. State v. Rogers, 13 Cal. 160. It follows from the foregoing that the order of court sustaining defendant's demurrer was properly made, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (S. F. 1,262.)

CERTIORARI—APPEALABLE ORDERS—REVIEW.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 1068, authorizing appeals from special orders after final judgment, certiorari will not lie to review an order of a trial court striking a stay bond, on appeal from a final judgment, from the files, and directing the sheriff to turn over to the judgment creditor money received by him on an execution on the judgment appealed from prior to the filing of the bond.

In bank. Petition by the Southern California Railway Company against the superior court of San Diego county for a writ of certiorari to review the action of the court in striking an order from the files, and ordering the sheriff to pay over certain moneys to a judgment creditor. Writ dismissed.

C. N. Sterry and H. J. Stevens, for petitioner.

VAN DYKE, J. In an action by Amelia B. Baker and husband against the Southern California Railway Company, petitioner herein, tried in the superior court of San Diego county, plaintiffs recovered judgment, from which judgment, and an order denying a new trial, the petitioner, as defendant therein, appealed on October 9, 1897; and on October 21st said defendant filed an undertaking on appeal, which, by reason of certain defects, was insufficient to stay execution of the judgment. Prior to the filing of said undertaking, execution was issued on the judgment, and notice of garnishment served upon the First National Bank of San Diego. On October 22, 1897, upon notice served, the judge of the superior court ordered the garnishee to pay to the sheriff an amount of money sufficient to satisfy the judgment, being about $150; but before any payment was made under said order the defendant therein, petitioner here, filed another bond, sufficient in form to stay the execution of the judgment. Thereafter, upon motion of plaintiffs' attorney in said action, the court made an order striking said last undertaking from the files of the court, and directing the sheriff to turn over the money received by him under such garnishment to the plaintiffs. The defendant in said action seeks, under writ of review issued herein, to have these orders annulled.

Respondent urges the dismissal of this proceeding on the ground that certiorari or review is not the proper remedy, inasmuch as the writ of review cannot issue where there is an appeal, and that, the orders complained of being special orders after final judgment, an appeal lies therefrom. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 1068. This contention is practically conceded on the part of the petitioner, provided the case of Harron v. Harron, 123 Cal. 508, 56 Pac. 334, decided since this proceeding has been pending, is to apply in this case; but it is claimed by petitioner that at the time of filing the petition here, and up to the decision of Harron v. Harron, it has been uniformly held by this court that an appeal would not lie in a case like this, and that therefore the old rule should govern. The following cases are referred to in support of petitioner's contention: Oullahan v. Morrissey, 73 Cal. 297, 14 Pac. 864; Langan v. Langan, 83 Cal. 618, 23 Pac. 1084; Id., 86 Cal. 132, 24 Pac. 852; Sellick v. De Carlow, 95 Cal. 644, 30 Pac. 795; Fairbanks v. Lampkin, 99 Cal. 429, 34 Pac. 101; Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 38 Pac. 740; Foley v. Horseshoe Co., 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42. Oullahan v. Morrissey was an appeal from a judgment of the superior court, and the court say: "The plaintiff, having consented to the entry of the judgment against himself, can not appeal from it, or, if he can, can be heard only as to that portion as to which he did not consent. That in this case is, at the most, the demand for costs, which, being less than three hundred dollars, does not give this court jurisdiction." Langan v. Langan was an appeal from an order pendente lite directing the defendant to pay plaintiff $25 per month alimony, and another order to pay $150 counsel fees, which appeals were dismissed, as stated by the court, "because the amount in dispute is too small to give the court jurisdiction." The second appeal in the same case, in 86 Cal. and 24 Pac., was also for temporary alimony and counsel fees entered before judgment. Sellick v. De Carlow was an appeal from an order denying motion to strike out plaintiff's cost bill, and the court (department 2), in its opinion, says: "We deem it proper to say, however, for future guidance, that the question whether or not this court has jurisdiction of an appeal from a separate, independent order made after final judgment, involving money only, and in an amount less than three hundred dollars, must be considered at least an open question." Fairbanks v. Lampkin was also an order taxing a cost bill, the amount of which was $171.20, and the court (department 2) say: "An order made after final judgment is a separate, independent proceeding, and when it involves money only, and the amount involved is less than three hundred dollars, this court has no jurisdiction, under the constitution, of an appeal from such order." The court, after referring to former decisions, say, "And, assuming the question to be an open one, we are satisfied that we have no jurisdiction of this appeal." This is the first instance where it is clearly held that in an order made after final judgment, even in a separate, independent proceeding involving money only, in an amount less than $300, an appeal will not lie. Perry v. Quackenbush was an appeal from the judgment, and from an order refusing to strike out the cost bill. After considering the appeal from the judgment, Commissioner Temple, who wrote the opinion, in reference to the appeal from the order, says, on the authority of Fairbanks v. Lampkin, supra: "The amount of the costs claimed was less than three hundred dollars. This court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal." Foley v. Horseshoe Co. was an appeal from a judgment and order denying a new trial, and from an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment taxing costs, and the separate appeal from the order taxing costs was dismissed on the authority of Fairbanks v. Lampkin.

As said in Harron v. Harron, Fairbanks v. Lampkin was decided mainly upon the authority of Langan v. Langan, and was based upon the proposition that the amount of money involved in the appeal was determinative of the jurisdiction of this court; but the appellate jurisdiction of this court includes all appealable orders that may be taken in a case which is within its jurisdiction, and it follows therefrom that the amount of money involved in an appealable order is not the test for determining its jurisdiction. And the court adds: "The correctness of the decision in Fairbanks v. Lampkin, supra, was, moreover, never brought before the court in bank; and, as it establishes no rule of conduct or of property, we have less hesitation in holding that, to the extent that it is inconsistent with the views here presented, it is not to be regarded as authority." The constitution confers upon this court appellate jurisdiction, among other matters, "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate," and this without regard to the money value involved. The action of Baker v. Railway Co. falls under this branch of jurisdiction, as was determined in the appeals taken from the judgment therein in 110 Cal. 455, 42 Pac. 975, and 114 Cal. 501, 46 Pac. 604, and (L. A. 483; opinion filed Oct. 31, 1899) 58 Pac. 1055. Under the former practice, as well as under the Code, all special orders made after final judgment are made appealable, without reference to any amount in value that may be involved in the order. And also, under the former practice, as well as under the Code, the writ of certiorari or review would not lie where there was an appeal. Gilman v. Contra Costa Co., 8 Cal. 52, was an appeal from an order overruling a motion to quash an execution and discharge a levy. The court say: "The first question presented is whether an appeal will lie in such a case. The 336th section of the practice act gives an appeal from 'any special order made after judgment';" and, after defining what an order is, within the meaning of the law, the court held that the one in question was appealable. In McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 298, the court held an order directing the application of certain property in proceedings supplemental to execution appealable. In Mayor, etc., v. Fulton, 45 Cal. 317, an order refusing to vacate an order granting a writ of assistance was held appealable. In Livermore v. Campbell, 52 Cal. 75, an order setting aside the judgment on the ground that it was invalid was held appealable. Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604, was prohibition to prevent fixing the compensation and paying a receiver on an order previously made; and it was held that the writ should not issue, "for the reason that the petitioners have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal." Stoddard v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 303, 41 Pac. 278, was an application to this court for a writ of certiorari or review, and to annul an order of the superior court granting an injunction after judgment; and in the opinion it is said: "It may be readily admitted that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order; but, as the order is appealable, certiorari will not lie, because it lies only where 'there is no appeal,'"—citing Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 322, 12 Pac. 270, where it is said: "The writ [certiorari] will not lie when there is an appeal from the action complained of; the writ is not given in lieu of an appeal, but only to review errors in excess of jurisdiction, for which an appeal does not lie." Proceeding further, the court say: "We have been referred to no case in which it has been held that under our Code the writ of certiorari will lie to reverse an appealable order. That the appeal does not offer a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy makes no difference. The provision of the statute governs." White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 54, 42 Pac. 471, was also an application to review and prohibit execution of an order of the superior court requiring a receiver to sell the property of the petitioner; and the court say: "It is very clear that the facts do not make a case wherein certiorari may be availed of. That writ will lie only where there is no appeal from the judgment or order complained of. [Citing a number of cases.] The order in question is a special order made after final judgment, and as such it is made the subject of appeal by express terms of the statute."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the petitioner's assumption that the decisions of this court prior to Harron v. Harron held that orders like the ones in question were not appealable, and that certiorari is the proper remedy, is not sustained.

The main grievance in this case consists in striking from the files the undertaking on appeal; for, the stay bond being out of the way, it was not improper on the part of the court to direct the application of the money in the hands of the sheriff to the satisfaction of the judgment. In other words, that order was a mere incident of the former proceeding. But both the orders are special orders made after final judgment, and as such are made appealable by express language of the Code; and as to the former, which involves no question of money value, no decision of this court can be found in which it is held that it is not appealable. For the foregoing reasons, the writ must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

(Sac. 577.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.)

NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT—PARTIES—OPINION—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—PRE-SUMPTIONS.

1. Where, on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, no objection was made to the plaintiff's delay, in filing his application, beyond the time limited, it will be presumed on appeal that the time was extended by consent.

2. Where a statement on which a motion for a new trial was heard left a space for, but did not contain, a map, which had been in evidence, and which plaintiff had been given permission to file, but the parties stipulated that the statement was correct, and no objections were raised there-to on hearing, it will be presumed that the map was before the court on the hearing of the motion, and defendant cannot raise the objection on appeal that the motion was heard on an incomplete statement.

3. Where one of the defendants disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and the court found that he had no interest, he is not a necessary party to a motion for a new trial, though the judgment was that "defendants" recover their costs.

4. Though Code Civ. Proc. § 660, does not make the opinion of the trial court a part of the statement on which a motion for a new trial should be based, the fact that at the hearing of such motion plaintiff presented the opinion, and it was received, is not prejudicial to defendant, since the opinion could not alter the facts found.

5. On appeal from an order granting a new trial the appellate court is not confined to the grounds on which the motion was granted, but may review the entire record, and the order will be affirmed if the record shows any statutory grounds sustaining it.

6. It being the duty of the trial court to grant a new trial when dissatisfied with the findings, and it not being bound by findings on conflicting evidence, on the granting of a new trial it is presumed that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence, and this though the motion for new trial was heard by a judge who did not try the case.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Lassen county.

Action by Jerome Churchill against George R. Flournoy and others. Judgment for defendants. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellants. Spencer & Raker, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to abate a certain dam and enjoin the diversion of water, with damages. As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiff was entitled to take nothing by the action, and that defendants were entitled to judgment for their costs, and judgment was accordingly entered. The court made an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, from which defendants appeal.

1. Appellants contend that the court abused its discretion in granting the motion upon a record showing laches by the moving party in making his application. We do not think it necessary to state the facts presented by respondent as accounting for the delay complained of. The record contains nothing to show that appellants, at the hearing of the motion, made the objection now urged. The Code does not prescribe the time within which the application for a new trial shall be heard further than to provide that it "shall be heard at the earliest practicable period after notice of the motion," etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 660. In Boggs v. Clark, 37 Cal. 236, cited by appellants, the plaintiff gave notice of a motion to dismiss defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant had not presented his motion in reasonable time, and the two motions were heard together. In the present case the objection was made for the first time in this court. We must presume that the time was extended by consent of the parties. Patrick v. Morse, 64 Cal. 462, 2 Pac. 49; Horton v. Jack, 115 Cal. 29, 46 Pac. 920; Hayne, New Trial & App. § 145, subd. 3, § 146.

2. It is claimed that the motion was heard on a skeleton statement, and should have been denied for that reason; citing District v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 44 Pac. 1074, and other cases. Counsel for plaintiff at the trial offered, without objection, certain portions of a map for the purpose of explaining the evidence given by witnesses. The court stated that counsel would be allowed at any time to remove the map and file a copy. The transcript then reads: "(Here insert tracing of map.)" This map does not appear in the transcript. The cause was tried by Judge Clough, of Plumas county, sitting by request of the judge of Modoc county. When the proposed statement came before him for settlement, it was in the same condition as now with respect to the map; i. e. the tracing had not been inserted. Counsel for both parties, however, stipulated "that the foregoing engrossed statement * * * is true and correct, according to the order settling the same, * * * and ordering that the original statement made by the plaintiff, and the amendments thereto proposed by the defendants, be engrossed as set out in this engrossed statement." Judge Clough, in the order settling the statement, recited the agreement of counsel, and proceeded: "And, the same having been duly and timely engrossed as directed by the judge, the same is hereby settled, and allowed as true and correct." The cause was transferred to Lassen county before the motion for a new trial was heard, and came before Judge Kelley, and was heard without any objection being made by either party that the map referred to in the statement was not engrossed or inserted at the proper place, or referred to, or identified. In certifying defendants' supplemental bill of exceptions the clerk added to his certificate a statement that no map was among the papers in the action when transferred from Mondoc county to Lassen county on August 22, 1896, "and no such map has been received for filing or filed in said court." We do not see how defendants can take advantage of this situation. They stipulated that the engrossed statement was true and correct without the map being inserted. By agreement of the parties, the motion was heard with the statement in the condition we now find it, and we must presume, if the court had occasion to consult the map, that it was before the court. We cannot consider the certificate of the clerk that no map was on file, for he had no authority to certify to such fact, and his certificate forms no part of the bill of exceptions. But, if we can look to the clerk's certificate, it does not go far enough to rebut the presumption that the map was used at the hearing, although not filed. It may have been used and not filed.

3. It is contended that all the parties necessary to the hearing were not before the court on May 6, 1898, when the court heard the motion, and the court had no jurisdiction to grant the motion. The contention rests upon the alleged fact that defendant William S. Flournoy, Sr., died on January 4, 1897,—about three months before the motion was noticed to be heard,—and that there has been no administration of his estate. Affidavit of the fact was made by defendant J. D. Flournoy October 31, 1898, was served on plaintiff's counsel October 31, 1899, and was filed here November 15, 1899. No motion has been made to substitute any person as the representative of the deceased. Flournoy, Sr., appeared, and answered the complaint, but before the trial he, with two other defendants, Painter and Isaac Slippey, withdrew his answer, and filed an answer disclaiming all interest in the subject of the controversy, and alleged that all his acts in diverting and using the waters involved were done as the agent of his co-defendants William S. Flournoy, Jr., and George R. Flournoy, and through their authority. The court made findings as to the defendants who had not disclaimed, and found as to Flournoy, Sr., and the other two disclaiming defendants, that they had no interest, and claimed none, in the water or ditch involved. The judgment, however, is that plaintiff "take nothing as against the defendants, * * * and that the defendants do have and recover * * * from plaintiff their (said defendants') costs in this action."

The papers of plaintiff on the motion for new trial were served upon, and service acknowledged by, the attorneys of record for defendants. The order granting the motion recites that it was "duly argued by the respective counsel for litigants, and submitted to the court for decision." On April 28, 1898, the attorneys who appeared for defendants at the trial gave notice of appeal from the order. So far as appears, the same attorneys represented the defendants up to the time the transcript was filed,—July 19, 1898. After that date the defendants were represented by Messrs. Goodwin & Goodwin, one of whom was an attorney for defendants at the trial. Respondent brings to our attention some additional facts, which tend to show that appellants knew of the death of Flournoy, Sr., before the motion was heard, and failed to call attention to the fact at the hearing of the motion, or to notify appellants' counsel until after the transcript was filed here, and showing that respondent had no personal knowledge of Flournoy's death. Respondent claims, upon the authority of Moyle v. Landers, 78 Cal. 99, 20 Pac. 241, that appellants are estopped from raising the point at this time. In the case cited there was a fraudulent design shown to conceal the death of a party with a purpose to take advantage of the fact in this court. In the case at bar there is no evidence showing fraud or willful concealment of the death of Flournoy by appellants. It also appears that prior to March, 1895, Flournoy, Sr., conveyed all his interest in the lands and water and ditches involved in the action to one Hershey, and that the action was continued in Flournoy's name, with Hershey's consent, and with the knowledge of defendants' attorneys. The circumstances are not such as to take the case out of the rule that the death of a party revokes the authority of his attorney, and that service upon the attorney after the death of the party is ineffectual for any purpose. Hayne, New Trial & App. § 210; Moyle v. Landers, supra; Pedlar v. Stroud, 116 Cal. 462, 48 Pac. 371. As to defendant Flournoy, Sr., the court was without jurisdiction to make the order. He was not, however, a necessary party, and was not an adverse party, for he disclaimed any interest in the controversy. The case of Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 25, 44 Pac. 25, 46 Pac. 730, and 35 L. R. A. 318, cited by appellants, is not in point, for there the party was adverse, and was a necessary party to a determination of the issues. We do not think that the affirmance of the order would have the effect to vacate the judgment as to Flournoy, Sr. No exception need, therefore, be made with reference to him.

4. At the hearing of the motion the plaintiff presented and asked the court to identify and use the opinion rendered by the judge who tried the case in deciding the same. It was received, and forms part of defendants' bill of exceptions. Defendants objected at the time, and now claim, that the court erred in its ruling. The opinion of the judge who granted the motion is also made part of the record, from which it appears that he made use of the opinion objected to, and based his order, in part at least, upon certain views therein expressed with which he disagreed. The presence of the judge's opinion in the transcript, conceding that it forms no part of the record under section 660, Code Civ. Proc., cannot be prejudicial. The most that can be said is that it entailed needless cost upon appellants in compelling them to print it. It is not unusual for counsel to embody the opinion of the lower court in the briefs, the better to enable the appellate court to fully comprehend the points involved and the views of the trial court. Whether appearing in the briefs or in the record, however, the opinion cannot be considered to affect or change the facts as found.

5. Although the cause was tried by one judge, and the order was made by another judge, the latter possessed the same power, and was charged with the same duty, as though the motion had come before the former. Garton v. Stern, 121 Cal. 347, 53 Pac. 904. The failure to find upon a material issue is no ground for granting a new trial. Whether the judgment is authorized by the pleadings or findings is a question not involved in a re-examination of the facts. Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 Pac. 299. Nor is the trial court authorized to grant a new trial upon the ground that the conclusions, from the facts found, are a decision against law. Pierce v. Willis, 103 Cal. 91, 36 Pac. 1080. The examination is limited to a consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of fact (Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186), and whether any errors of law occurred at the trial (Water Co. v. Gage, supra). Plaintiff claimed the right to the waters of Pine creek in Modoc county, both as riparian owner of the lands through which the creek runs and as an appropriator of the waters. Plaintiff sought to enjoin defendants from maintaining their dam located in Pine creek, above plaintiff's point of diversion and above his riparian lands, and from diverting the waters of said creek through their ditch leading from said dam, and prayed that the said dam be permanently removed. Defendants state in their brief that they "did not plead title by adverse possession, but merely the bar of the statute to plaintiff's cause of action. The plea was defensive merely, and would not support a judgment for defendants to any amount of water." Nevertheless defendants' evidence was directed to their prescriptive right by prior appropriation and user for the statutory period and longer. Plaintiff moved upon all the statutory grounds. The record is voluminous, and the briefs discuss with ability and much detail every phase of the case. It is only necessary for us to discover whether any of the grounds are sufficient, for the rule is well settled that the order granting a new trial will be affirmed if it can be justified on any ground made by statute the subject of a motion for a new trial; and this court is not confined to the ground on which the court below placed its order; for, as was said in Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124, the court below "cannot, by stating in its order [and, we may add, or in its opinion] that the motion is granted upon one ground only, and denied upon the others, deprive the other party of the right to a review by this court of the entire record." See, also, Hayes v. Fine, 91 Cal. 391, 27 Pac. 772; In re Kingsley's Estate, 93 Cal. 576, 29 Pac. 244. We are, therefore, not confined to the reasons "expressly set forth" by the judge in his opinion as the grounds on which the motion was granted. Besides, the order itself is general, and discloses no grounds upon which it is based. There are 67 separate findings of fact, many of which, if not all of them, are material, and rest upon conflicting evidence. This fact is so manifest from an examination of the opinion of the trial judge and the elaborate briefs of counsel that we deem it unnecessary to specify particulars. It was said in a recent case here: "It is the duty of the judge of the trial court to grant the new trial whenever he is not satisfied with the verdict, if tried by a jury, or with the findings, if tried by the court; and he is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence, as is this court." Condee v. Gyger (Cal.) 59 Pac. 26. And it was further therein said: "In support of the order, we must presume that the court changed its opinion as to the effect of the evidence, and reached a different conclusion upon the hearing of the motion." The same presumptions must be indulged, although the motion was heard by a judge who did not try the case. It may be that the judge who tried the case would have adhered to his decision on all points, and that defendants have been placed at a disadvantage by having the motion heard by a judge who could only gain his impressions from the statement. Still the rules of law place him in the shoes of the trial judge, clothed with all his powers and duties, and we are not permitted to otherwise regard him or his order made in the case. We advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

MORE v. MORE et al. (S. F. 1,104.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1900.)

ADMINISTRATOR—REMOVAL—JUDGMENT.

A judgment rendered against an administrator, after his removal from office, is invalid, though rendered during the pendency of an appeal by him from the order of removal.

In bank.

For opinion in department, see 53 Pac. 1077.

Whitcomb & Boyle and F. R. Whitcomb, for appellant. Thos. McNulta, Alex. G. Eells, and John B. Mhoon, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, H. Clifford More, as administrator of the estate of Lawrence W. More, deceased, brought this action against John F. More, administrator of the estate of Alexander P. More, deceased, to establish his claim of $13,670.14 against the estate of said Alexander P. More, deceased, under section 1498 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On January 15, 1897, judgment was entered for plaintiff for the full amount of his claim. Afterwards John F. More, and Eliza M. Miller, who had been appointed special administratrix of the estate, moved to vacate and set aside the judgment upon the ground that at the time it was rendered the said John F. More was not administrator of the estate. Upon the hearing of the motion it appeared by stipulation that the said John F. More had been on the 1st day of June, 1896, suspended as administrator, and that on June 4, 1896, Eliza M. Miller had been appointed special administratrix of the estate, and that on the 21st day of September, 1896, the court had revoked and annulled the letters of administration which had been issued to John F. More, and that on the 20th day of November, 1896, the said John F. More had taken an appeal to this court from the order revoking his letters, and that such appeal is still pending. On April 13, 1897, the court granted the motion to vacate the decision and judgment, and made an order annulling and setting the same aside. From this order the plaintiff appealed, and this appeal is the one now before the court, being designated as No. 1,104.

When this appeal was submitted to this court in department, there was also another appeal, designated as "No. 897," submitted, which was an appeal taken by certain interveners from the original judgment and from an order striking out their intervention. In an opinion submitted to the court by the commissioners, which covered both appeals, it was recommended that the appeal No. 897 be dismissed, and that in this present appeal (No. 1,104) the order appealed from be affirmed. This opinion was approved by the department, and judgment was entered accordingly. 53 Pac. 1077. Upon a petition for hearing in bank of both appeals the petition was denied as to No. 897, although the order dismissing the appeal was modified, and based upon a ground other than the one taken in the opinion of the commissioners. See 54 Pac. 263. The appeal No. 1,104 is therefore the only one now pending here in the case.

Upon further consideration of the case, we think that the order appealed from should be affirmed, for the reasons given in the following part of the opinion of the commissioners, which is hereby adopted. That part of the opinion which we hereby adopt is as follows: "The question involved in the appeal No. 1,104 is, was the judgment rendered against 'John F. More, as the administrator of the estate of Alexander P. More, deceased,' invalid, he having been removed from his trust, and having ceased to be administrator of the estate some months before the judgment was entered? If it was, there was clearly no error in setting the judgment aside on motion.

* * * It has also been held in other jurisdictions that, where an executor or administrator is removed from his trust, he ceases to have any connection with the estate, and no judgment relating to its affairs can be rendered against him. In Wiggin v. Plumer, 31 N. H. 251, it is said, on page 266: 'He ceases to be a party to the action on removal from his trust as absolutely as if he were dead, and the action must either be prosecuted against the new representative of the estate, or it will be discontinued. * * * When the administrator is displaced, he ceases to have either interest in or power over that estate, and a judgment to reach the estate must be rendered against the party entitled to represent it. The judgment must also be for a sum to be levied of the goods and estate of the deceased in the hands of the defendant administrator, to be administered. Such a judgment cannot be rendered against one who appears by the record not to be administrator.' In Bank v. Stanton, 116 Mass. 435, it is said: 'Upon her removal from the office of executrix, her ability to and right to defend against this action ceased. It follows that no judgment therein can be rendered against her.' In Re Dunham's Estate, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 162, it is said: 'We are of the opinion that the judgment, having been rendered after the cessation of the powers of Mrs. Dunham as executrix, was wholly void as evidencing the existence of a claim against the estate.' And in Taylor v. Savage, 1 How. 282, 11 L. Ed. 132, it is said by the supreme court of the United States, Taney, C. J., delivering the opinion: 'By this removal from the office of executor he was as completely separated from the business of the estate as if he had been dead, and had no right to appear in, or be a party in, this or any other court to a suit which the law confided to the representative of the deceased.' It is objected, however, for the appellant that the effect of the order removing More from his trust as administrator was suspended by his appeal therefrom until the final determination of the appeal, and that meantime he continued to be the administrator of the estate; citing In re Moore's Estate, 86 Cal. 72, 24 Pac. 846. That case simply holds that, pending an appeal from an order removing an administrator of an estate, he is suspended from office, and it is within the power of the court to appoint a special administrator to act during the period of suspension, but not to appoint a general administrator until such order or removal becomes final. It is true that, pending the appeal from the order removing More, he was only suspended from the office of administrator. But after the removal he ceased to be practically and in effect the administrator of the estate. He could exercise no powers, and perform no duties, as such. 'He was as completely separated from the business of the estate as if he had been dead.' The appeal did not revive, or in any way restore, his powers. 'The effect of an appeal from an order setting aside a judgment is not to revive the judgment. The judgment no longer exists, so far as the assertion of any rights under it is concerned, until it shall be brought into force again by a reversal of the order setting it aside. * * * The Code does not provide that an order appealed from shall cease to exist,—be annulled,—but that it cannot be further enforced by a proceeding upon it. Here the revocation of probate and the surcease of appellant's functions as executor became complete eo instanti the order of revocation was entered.' In re Crozier's Estate, 65 Cal. 332, 4 Pac. 109. We conclude, therefore, in view of the well-settled rules of law, that, after More was removed from his office as administrator, no judgment could properly be entered against him as such administrator, and that there was no error in setting the judgment in question aside." For the reasons above given, the order appealed from in this appeal (No. 1,104) is affirmed.

SACRAMENTO COUNTY v. SOUTHERN
PAC. R. CO. et al. (Sac. 586.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1900.)

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 59 Pac. 568.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this case, because in my opinion, the decision rests necessarily upon a doctrine destructive of essential safeguards of important public rights. The essence of the decision is that a contract, void for want of compliance with the conditions and limitations upon and under which alone boards of supervisors have power to bind their counties, acquires all the force and obligation of a valid contract, if the contractor commences work and expends money in pursuance of its terms before he is notified that the county repudiates it. This doctrine sweeps away at once all limitations upon the power of the board, for it can readily be seen that the contractor must always have it in his power to commence work just as soon as he has induced the board to enter into a contract in defiance of the regulations intended to govern their action, and it is also apparent that the board which desires to make contracts in disregard of the law will have the same motive to allow the commencement of work that they have to enter into the illegal contract.

And how can the equitable doctrine of estoppel apply in such a case against the public? The facts are all known to the contractor. There has been no misrepresentation, —no concealment. He knows what the contract is and how it has been obtained. If it is illegal and void, he knows it, and if he goes to work under it he does so with his eyes open. In such case there can be no estoppel.

The expression quoted in the department opinion from Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 266, was never the law even of that case. It was but the opinion of a single judge, not concurred in by his associates, and expressly repudiated by him in the later case of Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 109, where he lays down the doctrine which this case sets aside. It is true that some decisions have been made in other jurisdictions which sustain the present ruling here, but it is certainly opposed to the views which have heretofore prevailed in this court, and to the weight of authority elsewhere. The judgment of the superior court should have been affirmed.

APPEAL—ALTERATION OF RECORD—DISMISSAL.

pellant's attorney makes alterations in the printed record, by underscoring various passages, and by marginal notes and interlineations in writing, for the purpose of directing attention to particular parts of the record, and, without leave of court, alters his reply brief by pasting therein numerous leaflets containing citations of authorities, and comments thereon, of which no service is made on opposing counsel, thus imposing upon the court more labor than would have been required to dispose of the case on its merits if presented in an orderly manner, and there appears to be no substantial merit in the appeal, it will be dismissed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action on a promissory note by J. F. Clarke against Henry Mohr, Kate C. Byrne, Florence B. Hinckley, and others. Complaints in intervention were filed by Henry I. Kowalsky and Timothy Hurley. From a judgment in favor of the intervenor Kowalsky, plaintiff and the intervenor Hurley appeal. Motion by intervenor Kowalsky to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Alfred Clarke, for plaintiff. Wilson & Wilson and H. Wilkins, for defendants. T. J. Crowley and A. R. Cotton, for intervenors.

PER CURIAM. A printed transcript of a portion of the record of this case was filed here January 12, 1899, and since that date the court has been simply deluged with motions to supply its defects, and to dismiss the appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial. At present the printed record and briefs make a very modest show by the side of the bulky mass of papers of every shape and hue—in manuscript and typewriting—which constitute the files of the case. The faults of procedure on the part of counsel have cost the court far more trouble than would have been required to dispose of the case upon its merits if it had been presented in the simple and orderly manner provided for in our rules, and the court is brought seriously to consider whether we are justified in devoting more of our time to the unraveling of the legal tangles gratuitously imported into this case at the expense of litigants who present the merits of their appeals unembarrassed by such superfluous difficulties.

Some months ago, in department 1, an order was made dismissing the appeals herein from the order denying a new trial, and overruling the motion to dismiss the appeals from the judgment. 58 Pac. 176. Since the order was made the attorney for appellants has taken the liberty of making a number of alterations in the printed record on file here by underscoring various passages, and by marginal notes and interlineations in writing. It is true that none of these alterations is of much consequence; for, in spite of them, the court can easily see what the real record is. The transcript is simply marred and defaced, without being materially altered or changed in meaning, and it is evident that the alterations were made, not with any intention of practicing an imposition upon the court, but rather for the purpose of directing attention to particular parts of the record, and to papers among the files which counsel supposes to have an important bearing upon his assignments of error. Besides these alterations in the record counsel for appellants has altered his reply brief by pasting therein numerous leaflets, containing citations of authorities and comments thereon. As to these additional citations, the court would have permitted them in accordance with its usual practice, if leave had been asked, but it would have required service of the amendments on the opposing parties. It will thus be seen that, although the fault of counsel in making these unauthorized changes in the record and printed brief is not a trivial one, it is doubtful whether it is a sufficient ground for dismissing the appeals from the judgment, as we are again asked to do.

But one result of these alterations, and the motion to which they have given rise, is that we have been compelled again to go on through the papers in the case, and to make a pretty thorough examination, not only of the record proper, but of many of the loose papers which have been added to it. The result is the discovery that there is no substantial merit in the appeal. All that is left is the appeal from the judgment, which is fully in accordance with the substantial rights of the parties; it being plain from the unquestioned and unquestionable findings of the superior court that neither of the appellants was ever entitled to any relief in the action. On this point they make no serious contention that the superior court erred, but they attack the judgment for the intervener on various purely technical grounds. We cannot see what concern it is to them whether the intervener is entitled to a judgment or not. They do not have to pay it, and the defendants, who do have to pay, consented to it. Such being the case, we do not feel obliged to waste more time upon it. The appeals are dismissed.

(S. F. 1,779.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1900.)

JOINT TORT FEASORS.

That some of the defendants, in an action in a state court for the wrongful death of plaintiff's intestate on a sailing vessel, made application, as the owners of the vessel, to a federal court, for a limitation of their liability under the United States statutes relating to the merchant marine, and that the federal court enjoined plaintiff from further proceedings in the state court against these defendants, is not a bar to the plaintiff proceeding in such court against the other defendants, where he has received no satisfaction for the wrong complained of.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Henry Grundel, administrator, etc., against the Union Iron Works and others. From a judgment dismissing the complaint as to four of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant. Wilson & Wilson and Andros & Frank, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, J. The plaintiff brings this action under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state, as administrator of the estate of Frank Grundel, deceased, to recover damages on account of the death of the latter, occasioned by the wrongful acts of the defendants. Eighteen defendants were named in the complaint, five of whom are fictitious, and no person appeared or answered in their names. The corporation defendant answered separately, and the twelve other defendants, represented by other attorneys, also appeared and answered. Nine of these twelve subsequently filed a supplemental answer, setting forth that they were the owners of the schooner Gracie S, on or about which the injury occurred, and had made application in the United States district court of the Northern district of California for limitation of liability under the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to American merchant marine, and that upon filing their petition in said court a monition was issued in the usual form, and served upon the plaintiff and his attorneys, and all persons claiming damages resulting from the accident mentioned in the plaintiff's complaint, and the said court enjoined plaintiff from any further proceedings in the suit in the superior court against the nine defendants claiming to be the owners of said vessel. An appraisement of the schooner was made, the value being fixed at $12,500. The plaintiff filed his answer in the United States district court to the petition of said nine defendants, but said cause has never been tried in the admiralty court, and is still pending.

The plaintiff made no further attempt to proceed in the superior court against the alleged owners of the vessel, but as to the other defendants who had appeared, to wit, the Union Iron Works, Barber, Castle, and Swanson, the plaintiff elected to proceed to trial in the said court. The case was regularly on the calendar of the superior court for trial December 2, 1897; whereupon the defendant the Union Iron Works moved the court to dismiss the action as to it, on the ground that nine of the defendants had instituted proceedings in the federal court for limitation of liability, and that said defendant Union Iron Works was sued as a joint tortfeasor with said nine defendants in whose behalf the restraining order had been issued against the plaintiff from proceeding to trial. The court took the motion under advisement, and the trial of the action was continued till April 4, 1898, at which time plaintiff endeavored to proceed with the trial as to said defendants other than the nine who were the owners of said vessel. The Union Iron Works thereupon renewed its motion to dismiss the action upon the grounds stated, and said defendants Barber, Castle, and Swanson, also on the same grounds, moved to dismiss the action. The court granted the motion of said four defendants, and a judgment of dismissal was accordingly entered. The appeal is from this judgment of dismissal, on a bill of exceptions.

The question presented on the appeal is whether the plaintiff, with a cause of action alleged in the complaint to be for $50,000 damages, is barred from recovery of a proper measure of damages, as against the respondents herein, in consequence of the proceedings in the federal court by the nine defendants, the owners of said vessel, in which their liability is limited to the appraised value of said vessel. The plaintiff has not actually received satisfaction in any amount, nor what in law is deemed the equivalent of satisfaction. The law as to the liability of joint tortfeasors is thus stated by Black on Judgments: "The general rule followed in America is that the liability of two or more persons who jointly engage in the commission of a tort is joint and several, and gives the same rights of action to the person injured as a joint and several contract. Consequently a judgment recovered against one of two joint tortfeasors, remaining unsatisfied, is no bar to an action against the other for the same tort." 2 Black, Judgm. § 777. Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts (2d Ed. p. 159), says: "The rule laid down by that eminent jurist, Kent, in Livingston v. Bishop, 1 Johns. 290, which has since been generally followed in this country, is that the party injured may bring separate suits against the wrongdoers, and proceed to judgment in each, and that no bar arises to any of them until satisfaction is received. * * * It is to be observed, in respect to the point above considered, where the bar accrues in favor of some of the wrongdoers, by reason of what has been received from or done in respect to one or more of the others, that the bar arises, not from any particular form that the proceeding assumes, but from the fact that the injured party has received satisfaction, or what in law is deemed the equivalent." In Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 199, 29 Pac. 31, the plaintiff had recovered a judgment in the sum of $5,000 against Schloss and Hinkle in an action for malicious prosecution. A new trial was granted as to defendant Schloss, which resulted in a verdict and judgment against Schloss for $3,000, and he appealed from the judgment. At the time of the second trial, the original judgment for $5,000 against Hinkle was of record and unsatisfied. It was contended by the appellant that no judgment should have been rendered against Schloss on the new trial, so long as the original judgment existed against Hinkle; that, while separate suits may be brought against each of several joint tortfeasors, yet, if the defendants are sued jointly, there can be but one verdict and judgment. This court answered this contention that "such is not the prevailing rule in the United States," quoting from Judge Cooley the above-cited paragraph. The court, continuing, says: "There is no pretense that any part of the judgment against Hinkle has been paid or satisfied, or even that execution has been taken out upon the judgment." Nichols v. Dunphy, 58 Cal. 605, was an action in tort. A judgment had been obtained against defendants. One of the defendants appealed, and secured a reversal of the judgment. Thereupon the other defendant, against whom execution had been taken out, moved for an order quashing the execution. That motion was granted, on the theory that there could not be a several judgment when the action had been joint. Discussing the action of the court below, this court says: "We think the court erred in quashing the execution against Carmen. The judgment against her was unaffected by the appeal of her co-defendant and the subsequent proceedings thereon." In Butler v. Ashworth, 110 Cal. 614, 43 Pac. 386, it is said: "If one be injured by a tortious act, he is entitled to compensation for the injury suffered, and if several persons are guilty in common of the tort, the injured one has his right of action for damages against each and all of the joint tortfeasors, and may, at his election, sue them individually or together." In case one of the wrongdoers has become bankrupt or insolvent, the effect as to him would be to limit the liability to the available assets of his estate, which might be merely nominal. His bankruptcy proceeding, however, would not have the effect of discharging the solvent wrongdoers. Nothing short of satisfaction in some form constitutes a bar in a proceeding like the present. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

RUGGLES v. CANNEDY et al. (Sac. 244.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1899.)

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 53 Pac. 911.

PER CURIAM. Upon further consideration, we adhere to the opinion and judgment heretofore rendered in department.

GAROUTTE, J. I dissent from the conclusion declared in this case. I do not believe the bar of this state construe the law upon this question as it is here construed, and, owing to the important principle involved, I feel compelled to briefly indicate why this case should be decided the other way.

The true solution of the question raised upon this appeal is dependent upon the construction to be given section 2957 of the Civil Code, which provides: "A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers in good faith and for value, unless: (1) It is accompanied by the affidavit of all the parties thereto that it is made in good faith and without any design to hinder, delay or defraud creditors; (2) It is acknowledged or proved, certified and recorded in like manner as grants of real property."

By virtue of the foregoing provision of the Code it is now held that a chattel mortgage must be immediately recorded upon its execution, or ipso facto it is void as to creditors, and the fact that the mortgage may be recorded before any creditor takes a single step towards judicially enforcing his claims is a matter wholly immaterial. The inevitable result flowing from this decision will be to stamp many chattel mortgages as worthless property when, up to the present moment, their genuineness has never been doubted. The serious results to follow from thus holding should lead the court to an opposite conclusion, if a fair construction of the statute justifies it. For the simplest of reasons, it is apparent that it would be work well done to declare the principles of law governing the recording of chattel mortgages to be similar to those governing the recordation of mortgages of real estate; for the law as to the effect of recordation of mortgages upon real estate is well defined and understood. And now, if in the case of chattel mortgages we declare the same principles to be controlling, a broad road is marked out, which all may follow. But a decision to the contrary simply blots out all roads. If it be held under this statute that chattel mortgages similar to the one here involved are void as to creditors, the decision will produce an abundant crop of litigation. This litigation will not only arise upon the rights of creditors as bearing upon chattel mortgages now outstanding, but as long as the statute stands it will be a prolific source of litigation as to the respective rights of creditors and mortgagees.

I am satisfied the provisions of the Code only mean that unrecorded chattel mortgages are void as to creditors who assert their claims by attachment or otherwise before a recordation is had. This construction may be maintained without violating any principle of statutory interpretation, and for the reasons already suggested, if for no other, the court should so declare. I know of no reason, based upon sound policy, which may be urged in favor of a contrary construction. It is suggested in the majority opinion that such a construction of the statute cannot be declared, because the policy of our law is opposed to secret liens. But my construction of the statute is directly in line with a policy opposed to secret liens. Until the chattel mortgage is recorded, it is void as to third parties, and is only valid between the parties. A mortgage only valid between the parties is in no sense a secret lien as to third parties, and public policy is in no way concerned in such a mortgage. Men may pass their days and nights in mutually giving each other chattel mortgages upon their property, and it is no concern of the public. The public has no interest in that kind of a transaction, but is a totally indifferent party.

In a great many of the states the statute does fix the time when a chattel mortgage must be recorded. In Ohio, where the statute even declares that a chattel mortgage shall be recorded "forthwith," under the penalty of being void as to creditors if not so recorded, the highest court of that state held such a mortgage valid as against all creditors whose rights had not attached previous to the recordation. Wilson v. Leslie, 20 Ohio, 161. But we will not attempt a review of the authorities of other states bearing upon the question here involved. It is sufficient to say they are irreconcilable, although it may be safely claimed that a large preponderance are favorable to the conclusion we here declare. Some of these authorities are incidentally enumerated in the case of Fassett v. Wise, 115 Cal. 322, 47 Pac. 47, 1095, 36 L. R. A. 505.

Section 3440 of the Civil Code, among other matters, declares: "Every transfer of personal property, * * * and every lien thereon, other than a mortgage, when allowed by law, * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession." It is now sought, by a process of reasoning by analogy from the provisions of section 3440, to construe the aforesaid section upon chattel mortgages as requiring an immediate recordation of the mortgage. Reasoning by analogy is not the best mode of reasoning, and conclusions thus deduced are often unsound. It may be further suggested that in a proceeding purely and entirely statutory the word "immediately" should not be construed into the statute by a process of analogous reasoning. If quasi judicial legislation is ever justified, it should rest upon a stronger foundation. If the legislature thought that chattel mortgages should be recorded immediately, it was a very easy matter for that body to have said so; and we see no authority to justify this court in invoking the provisions of section 3440 as to sales of personal property for the purpose of assisting in the construction of section 2957 as to chattel mortgages.

Section 2957 of the Civil Code was ingrafted therein in lieu of an act of the legislature of 1857 covering the whole question of chattel mortgages, and not, as the main opinion declares, in place of the statute of 1850. Whatever analogy existed under the act of 1850 between sales and mortgages of personal property was completely annihilated when the chattel mortgage act of 1857 was passed. An examination of a few of the provisions of that act shows this to a demonstration; for those provisions are directly opposed to the principles of law declared in the act of 1850, and likewise directly opposed to the decisions of this court, cited in the main opinion, rendered under the act of 1850. And I feel as sured they are likewise opposed to the principles recognized and approved upon which the present decision of the court is rested. The act of 1857 (section 7) provides: "The mortgagee in all mortgages made under this act shall be allowed one day for every twenty miles of the distance between his residence and the county recorder's office where such mortgage ought by law to be recorded to conform to the provisions of this act, before any attachment shall be valid made by the creditors of the mortgagor." This was the law at the time the Code was adopted, and it is therefore evident that the statute at the time pertaining to the sale and transfer of personal property had no relationship whatever with the execution and recordation of chattel mortgages. Again, the subject-matter of section 2967 of the Civil Code is found in this chattel mortgage act of 1857. Yet that act itself, in section 7, which I have just quoted, places a construction upon those provisions entirely in line with my conclusion, and that construction should have great weight in deducing the proper conclusion in this case. Section 7 provides that the mortgagee shall have a certain number of days, dependent upon the distance he lives from the recorder's office, in which to record his mortgage, before it shall be void as to "attaching creditors." If respondent's position be the sound one, then that provision of the act should have simply said "creditors," and should have omitted any qualifications whatever as to "attaching creditors." Indeed, the substance of this identical provision of the chattel mortgage act of 1857 was carried into the first edition of Civ. Code, § 2937. This section conclusively demonstrates that the close relationship existing in the early legal history of this state between chattel mortgages and sales of personal property never existed after 1857.

Let us see into what deep water this reasoning by analogy leads us. If by analogy we are justified in inserting the word "immediately" in the chattel mortgage act, then, by the same analogy, it must be held that a chattel mortgage is void as to all creditors of the mortgagor having claims at any time during the period between the execution of the chattel mortgage and its recordation. Indeed, it has been held by this court in Cardenas v. Miller, 108 Cal. 258, 39 Pac. 785, that "the term 'creditors' is general and applies to creditors existing prior to the mortgage as well as subsequent." Yet it is not even claimed here that this mortgage is void as to creditors existing at the time it was executed, and no such claim can be made, for then the whole superstructure of the court's reasoning, builded story after story upon the theory of the creation of a false credit in the mortgagor and a public policy opposed to secret liens, would come down with a crash; for, as to creditors in existence prior to the execution of the mortgage, there would be no false credit in the mortgagor, and no secret lien in existence, at the time their debts were created. If these two sections of the Code are required to fill the same measure, and that a measure furnished by principles of analogous reasoning, the transfer of personal property and the chattel mortgage are each void as to the same class or classes of creditors; and, in the absence of an express legislative enactment to the contrary, this court has no right to hold otherwise.

In a transfer of personal property there must be an immediate delivery; ergo, it is argued the chattel mortgage must have immediate recordation. Such a construction of the statute in numberless cases demands an impossibility. The statute says that a chattel mortgage must be recorded in the county where the mortgagor resides, and also where the property is situated. This express demand of the statute often requires weeks to carry out. It is impossible that the two recordations shall take place immediately, or even at the same time. Section 2962 of the Civil Code allows a chattel mortgage to be given upon personal property situated in different counties. It is impossible to see how such a mortgage could be recorded immediately. What would be said as to the immediate recordation of a chattel mortgage executed in the county where the mortgagor resides, and where the property is situated, but 100 miles distant from the recorder's office? If a mortgage of that character is to be declared void as to creditors because not recorded immediately, it is probable that such a conclusion would invalidate recorded chattel mortgages in many counties of the state. Again, if a chattel mortgage may not be executed 100 miles from the recorder's office because an immediate recordation under such circumstances would be impossible, then how near to the recorder's office must the execution of the mortgage take place in order that it may be recorded immediately? This interrogatory presents an interesting question, and suggests a broad and fertile field for future litigation.

It is also insisted that a construction of the statute demanding an immediate recordation of a chattel mortgage is justified from general language found in Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550, to the effect that the recordation of a chattel mortgage is an equivalent of the immediate delivery demanded by section 3440 of the Civil Code. There was no element of immediate recordation of the chattel mortgage involved in that case, and the court never for a moment thought it was declaring the law upon that important question when it used the language to which we are referred. The language used by the court was as clearly in point upon the case of a future recordation of a chattel mortgage as in the case of an immediate recordation. At that time the court was speaking of the effect of the recordation of the mortgage, entirely disconnected from any question as to the time of recordation. This is conclusively apparent when we find the court upon the very same page of the opinion declaring: "The object to be attained by requiring the recording of mortgages of personal property is the same as that in providing for the registration of mortgages of real estate. The same general principles are alike applicable in each case. The design is to give notice to the public of all existing incumbrances upon real or personal estate by mortgages." In view of this language, Berson v. Nunan affords but a foundation of sand upon which to rest the weighty results flowing from this decision. As distinguished from Berson v. Nunan, it is said in Martin v. Thompson, 63 Cal. 4, that the chapter of the Civil Code treating of mortgages of personal property "substitutes the record of a mortgage for the actual and continued change of possession in case of other transfers, required by section 3440. The purpose of the actual delivery in the one case, and of the record or registry in the other, is to give notice to those who shall deal with the vendor or mortgagor." In speaking of the chattel mortgage act in Beamer v. Freeman, 84 Cal. 556, 24 Pac. 170, this court said: "This law substitutes the record of the mortgage for the actual delivery and continued change of possession made essential to effect transfers in other cases by section 3440 of the Civil Code." It would seem that the word "immediate" was intentionally omitted by the court in the language quoted in the two foregoing cases, and the language there used entirely and accurately expresses the law upon this question.

In conclusion, it may be suggested that section 3431 of the Civil Code provides: "In the absence of fraud every contract of a debtor is valid against all his creditors, existing or subsequent, who have not acquired a lien on the property affected by such a contract." In this case there is no actual fraud. Neither is there any constructive fraud, for the law has not so declared. In the face of this provision of the statute, it is impossible to see how the mortgagor's creditors have any rights as to the mortgaged property until they have first secured a lien upon it. In this case, before they took any steps to secure the lien the chattel mortgage was recorded. For the foregoing reasons, I dissent from the judgment.

PEOPLE v. LEWIS. (Cr. 549.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CONFESSION OF ERROR BY STATE—DETERMINATION OF MOOT QUESTIONS.

Where, on appeal from a conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses, the state admits that, if defendant is guilty of any crime, it is that of larceny, and not of the crime charged, and it is evident that defendant will not again be tried upon the charge of which he was convicted, the court will not consider moot questions arising upon the evidence, but will reverse the case.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Defendant was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he appeals. Reversed.

P. J. Mogan and J. J. Guilfoyle, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant was charged with and convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals from the judgment, from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and from an order denying his motion in arrest of judgment.

At the oral argument the attorney general stated that he was satisfied that if, under the evidence, the appellant was guilty of any crime, it was that of larceny, and not of obtaining money under false pretenses, and thereupon he confessed error. Counsel for appellant, however, contended that there were questions arising out of the evidence, and out of the admissibility of certain evidence, which should be determined here, for the benefit of the lower court upon another trial; and thereupon the cause was submitted. Section 1110 of the Penal Code provides that, where the false pretense is not evidenced by writing, it must be proven by the testimony of two witnesses, or that of one witness and corroborating circumstances. In this case there was no written evidence, and the testimony to the false pretenses was that of one witness alone; and appellant contends—First, that there were no such corroborating circumstances as the law contemplates; and, second, that the court erroneously admitted certain evidence touching the matter of corroboration. And these are the questions which he asks to have determined. But, upon further consideration of the case, it is evident that it will not be tried again upon the present charge, and that therefore these are merely moot questions, not calling for determination. Upon the confession of error of the attorney general, the judgment and orders appealed from are reversed.

(S. F. 1,942.)¹

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—CORPORATIONS— LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS OF INSOL- VENT BANK—PLEADING—AMENDMENTS TO PETITION—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where, in an action to recover upon a stockholder's statutory liability to the depositors of an insolvent bank, the plaintiff sues as assignee of certain depositors who had assigned their respective claims to parties who had assigned them to plaintiff before the commencement of the action, a mistake in describing plaintiff's immediate assignor as the depositor through whom he derives title is not so material as to make the correction by amendment the statement of a new cause of action, which is barred after three years, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 359, 333, subd. 1, providing that an action against a stockholder must be brought within three years after the liability was created.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. S. Nellis, plaintiff, against the Pacific Bank, R. H. McDonald, and others, defendants, to recover upon their statutory liability as stockholders in said bank for the demands of certain depositors whose claims had been assigned to plaintiff. Plea of the statute of limitations, and judgment for defendants as to part of plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Wm. H. Chapman, for appellant. Sawyer & Burnett, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Plaintiff sues for himself, and as assignee of certain 20 other depositors in defendant bank, to recover from its stockholders upon their statutory liability as such stockholders. Plaintiff had judgment against defendant James M. McDonald upon certain of the causes of action pleaded, but as to the causes of action assigned to plaintiff by Lewis Merrill, B. G. Ruhl & Co., and Annie White, and as to his own claim, the court gave judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment only as to the assigned claims of Merrill, Ruhl & Co., and White.

The original complaint was filed June 19, 1895, and the amendments were filed May 19, 1897. The court below held the last-mentioned assigned causes of action barred by subdivision 1, § 338, and section 359, Code Civ. Proc. It is conceded by appellant that, if the amendments state a new cause of action, the judgment should be affirmed; otherwise, all parties agree that it should be reversed. The three-years statute of limitations applies to deposits made more than three years before the commencement of the action. Wells v. Black, 117 Cal. 157, 48 Pac. 1090, 37 L. R. A. 619. And it is settled law that a new cause of action cannot be introduced into a complaint under the guise of an amendment, so as to evade the statute. Atkinson v. Canal Co., 53 Cal. 102; Meeks v. Railroad Co., 61 Cal. 149. It is equally well settled that, if no new cause of action is stated in the amendments to the original complaint, the amendments simply supersede the original by more fully setting forth the cause of action defectively alleged in the original complaint, whose identity is in no way affected. Barber v. Reynolds, 33 Cal. 501; Vanderslice v. Matthews, 79 Cal. 277, 21 Pac. 748; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100.

The court found that on June 22, 1893, the Pacific Bank was indebted to Ruhl & Co. in the sum of $2,286.18 on account of money deposited with the said bank; that in plaintiff's original complaint he alleged that Ada P. Ruhl on June 22, 1893, deposited in the bank the sum of $1,143.09, and also that L. Dallman on the same day deposited a like sum, which was within three years from the filing of the original complaint (these two sums equal the deposit made by Ruhl & Co.); that on May 19, 1897, plaintiff obtained leave to amend his complaint in respect of said two deposits, "on the ground of mistake in the statement of the names in which the original deposits were made," and the amendment was accordingly made, "wherein it was alleged that the said Pacific Bank was on the 22d day of June, 1893, indebted to B. G. Ruhl & Co. in the sum of $2,286.18 for and on account of money delivered to and deposited with said Pacific Bank by said B. G. Ruhl & Co. within three years prior to the commencement of this action"; that Ruhl & Co. assigned their claim to B. G. Ruhl and Minnie Dallman, and Ruhl and Dallman assigned to Ada P. Ruhl, and she to plaintiff, all prior to the commencement of the action. The court finds "that all of said sum was delivered to and deposited with said Pacific Bank by said B. G. Ruhl & Co. prior to June 22, 1893, and more than three years prior to the date of filing of said amendments, and that neither said Minnie Dallman nor said Ada P. Ruhl was a member of said firm of B. G. Ruhl & Co., but said B. G. Ruhl and L. Dallman were members thereof." The cause of action as to Annie White is in a similar situation. The court found that on June 22, 1893, the bank was indebted to C. W. Burgess in the sum of $463.30, deposited by him within three years prior to the commencement of the action; that, when the action was commenced, plaintiff alleged in his complaint that on June 22, 1893, the bank was indebted to Annie White in the sum of $463.30, deposited by her within three years prior to the commencement of the action; that on May 19, 1897, plaintiff obtained leave to amend his complaint on the ground of mistake in the statement of the name in which the original deposit was made, and an amendment was filed, alleging the indebtedness to Burgess as the depositor, and that he had assigned his claim to Annie White, and she to plaintiff,—both assignments being prior to the commencement of the action. It appears from the findings that the bank failed and closed its doors June 23, 1893, and ever since has refused to pay its depositors.

Appellant claims that he was not called upon to plead the chain of title to this money; that, had he alleged the ultimate fact of the indebtedness of the Pacific Bank to him at the commencement of the action, it would have been sufficient; that he erroneously stated that the particular money sought to be recovered was deposited by one of plaintiff's assignors, rather than another prior assignor, which was but an error in description; and that the description was necessary only to identify the claim sued on, and was not necessary in the pleading, for the fact was, as alleged, that plaintiff was the owner of the claim when the suit was commenced. Furthermore, it is claimed that no injury could have accrued to defendant from this error in description. Respondent replies that the complaint correctly states each claim as a separate cause of action; that the bank was not indebted to plaintiff on the assigned claims, as himself a depositor, but that the claim of every depositor was a chose in action belonging to him, which the depositor alone could assign; that the bank was liable to the depositor in the first place, and defendant, as a stockholder, was liable for his proportion of that particular debt; that the assignee could recover only by proving the particular liability of the bank, and that he was owner of the claim, and to prove this he must allege the facts, because the plaintiff must allege every fact that he is required to prove,—citing Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411, that a suit to recover the proportion of the debt due to A. will not lie to recover the proportion of the debt to B., for the causes of action are different.

It is true that plaintiff derives his right to sue from the depositor; but it is also true that before the action was commenced he obtained the assignment of the real depositor, and in his complaint he correctly described and identified the deposit or indebtedness for which he sued. He failed to state correctly the name of the depositor, while correctly stating the name of his assignor, who was in fact the depositor. The cause of action was the debt owing by the bank, and by the amendment this cause of action was not changed, but was identical, in point of amount and time when accrued, with that stated in the original complaint. That plaintiff made a mistake in describing the person through whom he derived title was not so material as to make the correction by amendment the statement of a new and different cause of action. In Heilbron v. Heinlen, 72 Cal. 376, 14 Pac. 24, where the complaint in ejectment described the land as in range 19 E., the court allowed an amendment showing the range to be 20 E., and held that the correction of the mistake was authorized by section 473, Code Civ. Proc., and did not substitute a new and different cause of action. See, also, Bulwer Con. Min. Co. v. Standard Con. Min. Co., 83 Cal. 613, 23 Pac. 1109. In the case of Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, an amendment was allowed by which there was added to the original cause of action for the contract price of services a claim on quantum meruit for the same services. The principle upon which the court proceeded was that no new facts were stated in the amendment upon which a new cause of action was based. And so here we find no new facts, except a mistake in the name of the depositor. The bank's indebtedness and the indebtedness sued upon are the same. The amendment could in no way have prejudiced respondent, for the indebtedness of the bank and the statutory liability of the stockholders therefor, as shown by the amendments, fully appeared in the original complaint. Respondent could have shown at the trial, if it were the fact, that the amendments alleged a different deposit or indebtedness from that pleaded in the original complaint, and this would have shown a cause of action different in its nature from that alleged. But the fact was that they were the same, except as to the misdescription of the depositor, which we do not think went to the nature or scope of the cause of action. The court found that the claim of Lewis Merrill had not been assigned to plaintiff, and that he was not the owner or holder thereof. This finding is not questioned in plaintiff's brief, nor can it be on this appeal. The judgment should be reversed as to the claims represented by the depositors B. G. Ruhl & Co. and Annie White, and as to the remaining portion of the judgment it should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed as to the claims represented by the depositors B. G. Ruhl & Co. and Annie White, and as to the remaining portion of the judgment it is affirmed.

CONNICK v. HILL et al. (S. F. 1,765.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1899.)

MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—SALE IN LOTS—SETTING ASIDE SALE—INADEQUACY OF PRICE—REFUSAL TO POSTPONE SALE.

1. Where the commissioner appointed to sell land on foreclosure at the mortgagor's request offers the land in parcels, and receives no bid for either parcel, he may offer and sell the land in one parcel, though the mortgagor requests him to again offer it in parcels.

2. While the judgment debtor, under Code Civ. Proc. § 694, may direct the order in which land shall be sold under foreclosure, when it consists of lots and parcels, it must be made clearly to appear, in a motion to set aside the sale for refusal to sell in parcels, that the property consisted of separate known lots or parcels.

3. Where the evidence as to whether a request was made by the debtor in foreclosure proceedings to have the land sold in combinations of parcels is conflicting, the court, on appeal, will presume, in favor of the order of the trial court, that no such request was made.

4. Inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground on which to annul a foreclosure sale, since the judgment debtor is allowed to redeem.

5. Where no reason is given for which a foreclosure sale should have been postponed, the sale will not be set aside because of a refusal to postpone, since such refusal is not per se an abuse of discretion.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county.

Foreclosure proceedings by John S. Connick against Charles W. Hill and another. A decree of foreclosure was granted, and from an order refusing to set aside a sale thereunder defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John W. Turner, for appellants. Gregor & Connick, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from an order made by the superior court of Humboldt county refusing to set aside a sale made under foreclosure. The plaintiff had regularly obtained a judgment and decree of foreclosure against defendants and others, and the court in the decree appointed one Belcher a commissioner for the purpose of making the sale. No directions were given in the decree as to the manner in which the property should be sold. The tract of land, as a whole, consisted of one body of 1,340 acres. The commissioner, after receiving the order of sale, gave due and proper notice that on the 7th day of June, 1898, the said lands and premises would be sold, in pursuance of the decree and order, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the court-house door, in the city of Eureka, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day. At the time and place of sale the defendant Charles W. Hill, who was one of the judgment debtors, requested and directed the commissioner to offer the said lands for sale in 63 separate parcels. The commissioner complied with the request, and offered the lands in the different parcels. He received no bid for either of the first 41 parcels, but the parcels from 42 to 63, inclusive, were sold to different bidders, and no complaint is made as to the sale of any of these parcels other than the first 41. After the parcels from 42 to 63 had been sold, the commissioner again offered the first 41 lots or parcels for sale as a whole. The judgment debtor requested the commissioner to again offer the 41 parcels separately, which request was refused. He then asked the commissioner to postpone the sale, which the commissioner refused to do. The first 41 parcels were then offered as a whole in one lot, and sold to plaintiff for the sum of $10,430, which was about the balance due him after first applying the proceeds of the sales of the lots other than the 41. The appellants gave due notice that they would move the superior court to set aside the sale to plaintiff upon several different grounds.

It is claimed that the sale of the 41 lots or parcels as a whole and in one parcel was an irregularity for which the sale should be set aside. We do not think so. The commissioner had complied with the request of appellants, and, without regard to the question as to whether or not the 41 parcels were "separate known parcels," had offered them for sale separately, and received no bids. After the other parcels had been sold, the appellants claim that they had the right to have him repeat what he had just done, and again offer the parcels separately. If they had the right to have him again offer the parcels the second time at the same sale, and before the same bidders, why not a third or a fourth? He had obeyed the dictates of the appellants to the letter, and, after receiving no bids, then did what he had a right to do under the circumstances,—offered the property in a lump, and received a bid sufficient to satisfy the judgment. He was not required to go through the idle ceremony of again offering the parcels separately. It is now the settled rule in this state that whenever separate known parcels of land are offered for sale separately in foreclosure proceedings, and no offer or bid made for either parcel, then the property may be offered and sold in one parcel. Marston v.

White, 91 Cal. 40, 27 Pac. 588; Society v. Behnke, 121 Cal. 341, 53 Pac. 812. The same rule is laid down by the supreme court of the United States. White v. Crow, 110 U. S. 183, 4 Sup. Ct. 71, 28 L. Ed. 113. The rule is to consider every sale made by an officer of court under the mandate thereof as final. Hopkins v. Wiard, 72 Cal. 262, 13 Pac. 687. When a party comes into court, and asks to set aside a sale, the burden is upon him to show such an irregularity or material departure from the statute as will justify the court in setting it aside. It is provided in the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 694): "The judgment debtor, if present at the sale, may also direct the order in which property, real or personal, shall be sold, when such property consists of several known lots or parcels."

It nowhere appears in the affidavits or record that the 41 lots were "known lots or parcels." It does appear that the appellant requested the sale of 41 different descriptions, but it does not follow that these 41 different descriptions were 41 different known lots or parcels. They may have all constituted one known lot or parcel. In a motion to set aside a sale on this ground, it must be made clearly to appear that the land consisted of several "known lots or parcels."

It is said the commissioner should have offered the lots in "combinations of parcels." If the law were such that appellants could require the property to be sold in combinations of parcels, the number of which might be infinite, there was a square conflict of evidence as to whether or not any request was made of the commissioner to offer the lots in such manner. We must presume in favor of the order of the court below, made upon conflicting testimony, that no such request was made. Particularly is this so when no such ground is stated in the notice of motion given by appellants, nor in their opening affidavit. And the appellants' attorney in his affidavit states that, after the sale of the lots from 42 to 63, "affiant then directed said commissioner, orally, to again offer said 41 parcels separately once more."

Inadequacy of price is stated as one of the reasons why the sale should be set aside. This is not sufficient ground upon which to annul a sale, particularly under our practice, when a judgment debtor is allowed to redeem. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 53; Railroad Co. v. Creed, 70 Cal. 501, 11 Pac. 772. But the evidence as to the value was conflicting, and we must presume, in favor of the order of the lower court, that $10,000 is and was the full value of the property, as stated by plaintiff in his affidavit. This being true, the property sold for $430 more than its value.

It is said that the commissioners should have postponed the sale, and that his refusal to do so is ground for setting it aside. It appears that the commissioner was requested to postpone the sale of the 41 parcels to 2 o'clock of the same day, and after consultation with his attorney refused to do so. No reason is given why the sale should have been postponed. While there may be circumstances that would justify an officer in postponing a sale, it clearly is not an abuse of discretion in all cases to refuse such postponement. We advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

BARCLAY v. BLACKINTON. (L. A. 766.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1899.)

LIMITATIONS—ACTIONS AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT—FILING—APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

1. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, provides that an action on a written instrument must be commenced within four years; and section 353 declares that if a person against whom an action may be brought die before the expiration of the time limited therefor, and the cause survive, an action may be commenced against his representative within one year after the issuing of letters of administration. Defendant's intestate died in 1896, leaving plaintiff's claim, due January 17, 1893, evidenced by a written contract, unpaid. March 2, 1896, letters of administration were issued to defendant; and on June 11, 1896, plaintiff presented his claim to defendant, who held it until August 16, 1897, when he rejected it, and plaintiff sued thereon October 2, 1897. Held that, since more than one year had elapsed after defendant's letters were issued before the action was commenced, the claim was barred, as the action could have been commenced after defendant had neglected for 10 days to pass on it, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1496, providing that, when the administrator neglects to allow or reject a claim for 10 days after it is presented, such neglect may by the claimant be deemed equivalent to a rejection on the tenth day.

2. The fact that the statement on motion for a new trial and the amendments were not presented in time is not ground for a dismissal of the appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by H. A. Barclay against J. C. Blackinton, as administrator of the estate of S. C. Blackinton, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

M. W. Conklin, for appellant. E. W. Camp, for respondent.

COOPER, C. Judgment was rendered in the court below upon findings in favor of plaintiff and against defendant as administrator. This appeal is from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The facts are not disputed, and, so far as pertinent to the question to be here decided, are substantially as follows: On the 17th day of January, 1893, Mrs. S. C. McLellan made a promise in writing to pay plaintiff on said day the amount in controversy, married the defendant, and died in February, 1896, leaving the amount unpaid. On the 21st day of February, 1896, the defendant was appointed administrator of the estate of deceased, and on March 2, 1896, letters of administration were duly issued to him. On June 11, 1896, the plaintiff duly made out and presented his claim in writing to defendant as such administrator. The defendant kept the claim, and did not notify the plaintiff of his action upon it until August 16, 1897, when he returned it with his indorsement in writing rejecting it. On the 22d day of October, 1897, this action was commenced. The only question to be here determined is whether or not the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations at the time the action was commenced.

It is provided in our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 337) that "an action upon any contract, obligation or liability, founded upon an instrument in writing executed in this state," must be commenced within four years. The action was commenced more than four years and nine months after the written promise was made and due, and the cause of action was therefore barred by the statute, unless within the exception of some other section of the Code. It is claimed that the case is within the saving clause of Id. § 353, which, so far as applicable here, is as follows: "If a person against whom an action may be brought die before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof, and the cause of action survive, an action may be commenced against his representatives after the expiration of that time, and within one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration." The defendant's intestate, against whom the action might have been brought, died before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof; and the plaintiff, under the provision of the section quoted, had one year after the issuance of letters of administration to the defendant in which to commence his action. He did not commence it within one year after the issuance of letters, but more than one year and seven months elapsed before the commencement thereof. The cause of action is therefore not within the saving clause of section 353, and was barred at the time the complaint was filed. In McMillan v. Hayward, 94 Cal. 360, 29 Pac. 774, it is said: "The statute had, therefore, commenced to run, and would continue to run, unless the case is brought within some express exceptions of the statute; and death is not made such, further than that the suitor may in such case commence his action within one year after letters are issued. This action was commenced neither within four years after the maturity of the note, nor within one year after letters were issued. * * * The evident purpose of section 353 is to secure to a party who has a cause of action against a decedent one year after the appointment of a legal representative within which to bring his action. This may or may not have the effect of extending the time." In this case the time would have expired January 17, 1897, but the statute quoted extended the time to March 2, 1897;

thus giving respondent 1 month and 15 days more time in which to bring his action than he had under the general statute.

The opinion of the learned judge of the court below is printed by plaintiff's counsel, and adopted by him as his brief. In the opinion it is said that the action was stayed by statutory prohibition, under section 356, Code Civ. Proc., which provides: "When the commencement of an action is stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition, the time of the continuance of the injunction or prohibition is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." After discussing the section quoted, and sections 1496, 1498, 1500, Code Civ. Proc., the judge said: "It appears clear, therefore, that the effect of section 1500 and the other sections above quoted is to prohibit the holder of any claim against an estate from beginning any action thereon until the claim has been presented to the administrator, and rejected by him." It appears clear to us that such is not the effect of the sections quoted. Section 1496 expressly says: "If the executor or administrator, or the judge, refuse or neglect to indorse such allowance or rejection for ten days after the claim has been presented to him, such refusal or neglect may, at the option of the claimant, be deemed equivalent to a rejection on the tenth day." And it has been held by this court that such action can be brought after the tenth day without any formal rejection of the claim. Bank v. Shoemaker, 67 Cal. 148, 7 Pac. 420; Roddan v. Doane, 92 Cal. 558, 28 Pac. 604; Cowgill v. Dinwiddie, 98 Cal. 481, 33 Pac. 439. Therefore plaintiff could have brought this action any time after June 21, 1896, up to March 2, 1897. It was his own laches not to have done so. The theory of the statute of limitations is that a creditor has the full statutory time, whatever that may be, on any day of which he may of his own volition commence an action. Hoff v. Funkenstein, 54 Cal. 235.

It is said that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1498, the plaintiff had three months after the claim was formally and officially rejected by the administrator in which to bring his action. We do not so construe the statute. The section may shorten, but cannot be held to lengthen, the general statutes of limitations. The special limitations of time within which suit must be brought against the estates of deceased persons are called in many states statutes of nonclaim, or of short or special limitation. These limitations exist independent of and collateral to the general law of limitations. 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 400, and cases cited.

After the 2d day of March, 1897, the claim was barred by the statute of limitations, and thereafter neither the administrator nor the court had the power to allow it. On the contrary, they were expressly prohibited from doing so. Code Civ. Proc. § 1499. If it could not be allowed because barred by the statute, it is difficult to conceive how it could be allowed by a rejection of it, and suit brought within three months after the rejection. If it was barred by the statute when rejected, it continued to be barred when suit was brought upon it. Any other construction would enable a claim against an estate to be kept alive for years, or until all the witnesses were dead, simply by the neglect of the administrator to act upon it. He might forget it, or by accident or negligence mislay it, and the estate be closed and distributed; and yet, under the interpretation of the statute claimed by plaintiff, suit could be brought upon it, and the assets taken from the heirs, though years had passed. If the contention of plaintiff is correct, the administrator by his negligence could add over seven months to the general statutes of limitation. If he could add seven months, there is no reason why he could not add seven years or any other time in the same manner. The right of a claimant to enforce his claim under our statutes of limitations depends upon his own vigilance, and is often lost by his own laches. We know of no principle that will preserve it by the carelessness or laches of the party against whom it is sought to be enforced. If the deceased had lived, and the plaintiff had presented his claim to her and demanded its payment on the 11th day of June, 1896 (the day of its presentation to the appellant), and she had kept it and never returned it, certainly it would not be claimed that the demand or written claim so made of her would prevent her from pleading the statute. Was the demand or written claim made of her administrator after her death of any greater effect? In the one case suit could have been brought without making or presenting any claim; in the other, a written claim is made requisite by the statute. It has been many times decided by this court that, when a claim is duly presented and allowed by the administrator and the judge, it stops the running of the statute. It has never been held that the mere presentation of it has the same effect. The statute of Illinois required all claims to be exhibited against the estate within two years from the grant of letters, or be forever barred. In discussing this statute the supreme court said in the case of Reitzell v. Miller, 25 Ill. 69: "It was not the design of the general assembly that the filing of the claim should arrest the general statute of limitations, which had previously begun to run, nor to prevent it from afterwards running upon a claim not due at the time of its presentation. The object of this section is to facilitate and produce speedy settlement of estates of deceased persons, and it could not have been the design to give creditors an unlimited period of time within which to establish the justice of their claims after they had been exhibited in the probate court. Such a construction would defeat the manifest intention of the enactment." The case is cited and approved in Morse v. Clark, 10 Colo. 219, 14 Pac. 327. In Toby v. Allen, 3 Kan. 413, in speaking of a claim where the debtor had died, the court said: "Whether the law shall operate to bar his claim is made to depend entirely upon his own action, subject to the conduct of the debtor as to absence, concealment, payment, etc. Its operation in no event is made to depend upon the action of third persons. No matter who shall commence a suit, or who shall forbear, the operation of the statute depends wholly, subject to the exceptions above referred to, upon the action of the owner of the claim sought to be enforced." Section 164 of the Code of North Carolina is similar to section 353 of our Code of Civil Procedure. The supreme court of that state, in construing the section in Benson v. Bennett, 112 N. C. 507, 17 S. E. 432, said: "The object in view is that when the cause of action survives, and is not barred at the time of the death, there shall be at least one year after the death of the creditor, or one year after the grant of letters of administration to the personal representative of the debtor, before action is barred. This is conclusively shown by the words of the section, that, if the party die before the claim is barred, action may be brought after the expiration of the time limited, and within one year."

The law, in its wisdom, prescribes periods of limitation, during which actions must be commenced against persons while living, or they will be barred. The reasons are much greater for requiring diligence in the prosecutions of claims or actions against the estates of deceased persons. It is the everyday experience of almost every lawyer that fictitious or doubtful claims are often presented against estates, that never would have been presented against the party if living. The claim may have been paid, and the only knowledge of such payment possessed by the deceased, whose lips are closed by death. The policy of the law is to settle up the estates of deceased persons as speedily as possible, to pay the just debts and expenses, and distribute the property to the rightful heirs or devisees. For this reason statutes are justified and upheld that shorten the period and time of presenting and bringing suits on claims against estates. The language of the supreme court of the United States in U. S. v. Wiley, 11 Wall. 513, 20 L. Ed. 211, may well be applied to respondent: "Statutes of limitations are indeed statutes of repose. They are enacted upon the presumption that one having a well-founded claim will not delay enforcing it beyond a reasonable time, if he has the power to sue. Such reasonable time is therefore defined and allowed." In this case the time was defined and allowed, and the respondent had the power to sue. The result may be a hardship, but it is not different from any other case where the party loses through mistake or ignorance of the law. It is of much greater importance that laws should be general and uniform in their operation, and enforced by uniform rules, applied alike to all cases, than that a particular hardship should be averted.

Plaintiff claims that the appeal should be dismissed because the statement on motion for a new trial and the amendments were not presented and filed with the clerk in time. This is no ground for the dismissal of the appeal. Neither does the case come within the rule of Wheeler v. Karnes (Cal.; filed June 13, 1899) 57 Pac. 893, cited by plaintiff. The statement was settled by the judge on the 10th day of March, 1899, and there is nothing in it to show whether or not any objection was made to its settlement in any manner, nor whether any exception was taken. There is a statement printed in the transcript, immediately after the settled statement, as to certain objections, but it is signed by the attorney for respondent only. This is no part of the record, and has no place in the transcript. People v. McMahon, Id. 224. Even if the statement should be disregarded, the facts appear from the judgment roll. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment on the findings in favor of appellant, and in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PEOPLE v. TERRILL. (Cr. 557.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1899.)

FORGERY—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY—DESCRIPTION OF INSTRUMENT.

Under Pen. Code, § 470, providing that one who, with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any deed, indenture, or "writing obligatory," is guilty of forgery, an information which fails to show whether a mortgage alleged to have been forged was given on real or personal property, or on any property, or whether it was given to secure a note or indebtedness of any kind, charges no offense.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Samuel B. Terrill was indicted for forgery. From an order sustaining his demurrer to the indictment, the people appeal. Affirmed.

Atty. Gen. Ford and James H. Campbell, for the People. Jackson Hatch and H. L. Partridge, for respondent.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to an indictment. The grand jury of Santa Clara county, on the 9th day of May, 1899, presented an indictment against the defendant in the following language: "The said Samuel B. Terrill is accused by the grand jury of the county of Santa Clara, state of California, by this indictment, found this ninth day of May, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine, of the crime of forgery, committed as follows: The said Samuel B. Terrill, on the first day of December, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-six, at the county and state aforesaid, uttered, published, and passed as true and genuine a certain false, forged, and counterfeit mortgage of said date, purporting to be made and executed by one George Donlan in favor of Clara A. Fread, said Samuel B. Terrill then knowing the same to be false, forged, and counterfeit, with the intent on the part of said Samuel B. Terrill to prejudice, damage, and defraud said Clara A. Fread, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." To this indictment the defendant interposed a demurrer upon the grounds that it does not substantially conform to sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, and that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense. The court below sustained the demurrer. "Forgery" is defined in section 470 of the Penal Code as follows: "Every person who, with intent to defraud another, falsely makes, alters, forges, or counterfeits any * * * deed, lease, indenture, writing obligatory, * * * is guilty of forgery." The word "mortgage" is not used in the section nor elsewhere in the Code in defining "forgery." Conceding that a mortgage is included in the words, "indenture or writing obligatory," the indictment must show that the mortgage is such in its legal character as if genuine might injure or defraud another. The only description of the mortgage alleged to have been forged is the date, December 1, 1896, "purporting to be made and executed by one George Donlan in favor of Clara A. Fread." Whether the mortgage was one which could in any manner have injured any one is, when measured by the indictment, a matter of conjecture. Whether it was given upon real or personal property, upon any property, or upon the planets is not disclosed. It is not shown that it was given to secure any promissory note or indebtedness of any kind or any obligation. It may have been void on its face, or given in direct contravention of some statute, or it may have been given for an unlawful purpose, and yet the information be true. It is an elementary principle of criminal law that the indictment or information must state that a crime has been committed, either by direct and positive averment in the language of the statute or its equivalent, or by stating facts which show that such crime has been committed. In no case can the indictment be aided by imagination or presumption. The presumptions are all in favor of innocence, and, if the facts stated may or may not constitute a crime, the presumption is that no crime is charged.

It may be that the defendant is guilty of some offense, perhaps of forgery, but we have nothing to guide us except the indictment. The officer intrusted by the law with the duty of drawing the indictment should have set forth facts showing that a crime had been committed. The order should be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

KEECH v. BEATTY et al. (L. A. 590.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1899.)

REPLEVIN—PLEADINGS—SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER—JUDICIAL RECORDS—OWNERSHIP—POSSESSION—RES JUDICATA.

1. To allow defendants in an action of claim and delivery to file supplemental answers alleging a final judgment against the plaintiff in another suit against two of said defendants, brought by him in the same capacity, to recover the same goods, as a plea in bar, was not error, where such answers showed that the issuable facts in the other suit were the same as in the case at bar.

2. The written opinion filed by the trial court in a case, being no part of the record, is not competent evidence to show what the issues were.

3. No recovery can be had by an insolvent's assignee in an action against an execution creditor for claim and delivery, where it is found that the plaintiff is not, and never has been, the owner of the property, and was not entitled to the possession of it, and that none of it was in defendant's possession at the commencement of the action.

4. That a judgment in an action for claim and delivery may be erroneous does not render its effect as res judicata less binding.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Orange county.

Action by E. E. Keech, as assignee of the firm of Beatty Bros., insolvents, etc., against Richard Beatty and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. James G. Scarborough and Brousseau & Montgomery, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from a judgment made and entered in the superior court of Orange county in favor of defendants, and comes here on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The action was brought to recover the possession of specific personal property, or, in case a delivery cannot be had, the value thereof. The findings show the facts substantially as follows: On the 10th day of May, 1895, John Beatty, Jr., and Robert Beatty, as co-partners, being the owners of a stock of merchandise, notes, and accounts of the value of $5,650, were insolvent and unable to pay their debts as they became due, and on said day they procured the said stock of merchandise to be levied upon and seized by virtue of two executions against them issued on two separate judgments which had been duly given and made, one in favor of the First National Bank of Santa Ana, and the other in favor of one Richard Beatty. That the said co-partners procured the said property to be levied upon with a view of giving the said judgment creditors a preference, and that the said judgment creditors, at the time of the issuing and levy of the said executions, had reasonable cause to believe that said co-partners were insolvent, and that the said levy under said executions was made to prevent the property from coming to the assignee in insolvency, and to delay and impede the operation of the insolvent act of 1880. On the 18th day of May, 1895, more than five creditors of the said co-partners filed their petitions in the superior court, in due form and properly verified, asking to have said co-partnership adjudged insolvent under the provisions of the insolvent act of 1880. On the 23d day of May, 1895, the defendant Crookshank, at sheriff's sale, under the executions hereinbefore referred to, became the purchaser of the property described in the complaint, and took possession thereof at said time; and at the time of said sale the said Crookshank had notice of the fact that the said co-partners were insolvent, and that a petition had been filed to have them adjudged insolvent, as herein stated. This action was commenced April 13, 1896, and at the time of its commencement the defendant Crookshank had in his possession only a remnant of the said goods and merchandise, the total value of which did not exceed $750, and neither of the other defendants had any part of the said property in their possession. On March 18, 1896, the plaintiff, having been duly elected assignee of the said insolvent co-partners, took the proper oath, duly qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such assignee; and on the same day the clerk of the court, in pursuance of the statute, duly conveyed by instrument in writing all the property of said insolvent co-partners to the plaintiff as such assignee. On the 8th day of June, 1896, the plaintiff, as assignee, commenced an action against the defendants Crookshank and the defendant bank, in the superior court of Los Angeles county, to recover the value of the same property described in the complaint in this action, and the said defendants in said last-named action duly filed their answer. That the said action so commenced in the superior court of Los Angeles county was by the same plaintiff who is the plaintiff in this action, and in the same right, and was against two of the same defendants who are defendants in this action, and involved the same property and subject-matter as that in litigation here. That the said action so brought in the superior court of Los Angeles county resulted in a judgment on the 16th day of March, 1897, duly given and made in favor of the defendants therein and against the plaintiff, and by the judgment it was duly adjudged and decreed that the defendant Crookshank was the owner of, and had valid title to, the said property, and that plaintiff was not, and never had been, the owner of the said property, nor any part thereof. The court in this case further found that the plaintiff is not, and never has been, the owner of the property described in the complaint, nor any part thereof, nor entitled to the possession thereof. As conclusions of law, the court found that the judgment so rendered on the 16th day of March, 1897, in the superior court of Los Angeles county, was and is final, and is a bar to the present action as to defendant Crookshank and the defendant bank; that plaintiff is not entitled to recover; and that defendants are entitled to judgment. The judgment is clearly the legal conclusion from the facts found. The greater portion of the plaintiff's brief is devoted to arguing the insufficiency of the evidence to support portions of findings Nos. 5, 6, and 7. We have carefully read the evidence, and we think the evidence supports the findings.

The defendants, by leave of court, were allowed to file supplemental answers, in which they set up by way of plea in bar a judgment rendered against plaintiff by the superior court of Los Angeles county on March 16, 1897. The plaintiff objected to the filing of the supplemental answers on the ground that they were immaterial, and demurred to them after they were filed upon the ground that they did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. The objection was overruled, and so were the demurrers. It is now urged that the rulings were erroneous because "the supplemental answers reveal the lack of identity of issuable facts." The supplemental answers show that the same plaintiff who is now plaintiff, and in the same right, commenced the action in the superior court of Los Angeles. The answers each set up a copy of the complaint in the action commenced in Los Angeles. The description of the property in that case, as contained in paragraph 2 of the complaint, is of the identical property described in the complaint in this case, and in each case the goods and merchandise are described as in "the business, store, and salesroom No. 202 West Fourth street, at the southwest corner of Fourth and Sycamore streets, in the said city of Santa Ana." The answers show that in the Los Angeles case the plaintiff made the same allegations as to his appointment as assignee, qualification, etc., as he has made in the present case. The supplemental answers further expressly allege that the persons, property, and transactions set forth in plaintiff's complaint in Los Angeles "are identically the same as those described and set forth in the complaint filed in this action." The orders of the court allowing the supplemental answers to be filed, and overruling the plaintiff's demurrers thereto, were correct. The answers showed that the issuable facts in the case in which the final judgment was rendered were the same as in the case at bar. The record does not show that any objection was made to the answers being filed on the grounds urged by plaintiff in his brief. The objection was that they were immaterial. Neither does the record show that any such ground was urged on demurrer. The demurrers were solely upon the ground "that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense."

The plaintiff at the trial offered in evidence the written opinion of the judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county in the action which resulted in a final judgment against plaintiff in that county, "for the purpose of showing the nature of that action and the issues which were submitted to the court for its consideration." The defendants objected upon the ground that the opinion was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and no part of the record in that case. The court sustained the objection, and the ruling is now claimed to be error. The opinion of the judge was no part of the record. If it be conceded that parol evidence may be given as to what the issues were in the former suit, the parol evidence would have to be competent. The written opinion, without even the form of having been made under oath, was not competent evidence for the purpose for which it was offered. It is urged that the estoppel in the former case could not apply to defendant Beatty, for the reason that he was not a party thereto. The court below did not find, as a conclusion of law or otherwise, that the former judgment was a bar as to defendant Beatty. It did find, however, that defendant Beatty did not have in his possession at the time of the commencement of this action any of the property described in the complaint. In such case, in an action in claim and delivery, the plaintiff cannot recover. Riciotto v. Clement, 94 Cal. 105, 29 Pac. 414. It further found that plaintiff is not, and never has been, the owner, or entitled to the possession, of the property. In such case he is not entitled to recover. Cardinell v. Bennett, 52 Cal. 476; Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750.

The findings are not inconsistent. Finding 5 shows that defendant Crookshank purchased the property described in the complaint at sheriff's sale on May 23, 1895, and took possession of it, but that he had sold and disposed of all of it, except a remnant worth about $750, prior to the time this action was commenced. This is not inconsistent with the finding of estoppel by reason of the former suit, neither is it inconsistent with finding 7, that plaintiff is not, and never has been, the owner of, or entitled to the possession of, the property. The finding that defendants the bank and Beatty seized the property upon executions, with a view to obtain a preference, and that at the time they had reasonable cause to believe the co-partners to be insolvent, is not inconsistent with the finding of the estoppel by reason of the former judgment between the same parties, and involving the same subject-matter. The former judgment may have been erroneous, but, it being a final judgment, its effect as res judicata is none the less binding in this case. Freem. Judgm. § 249; Bigelow, Estop. (5th Ed.) p. 261. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

In re HEYDENFELDT'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1900.)
EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PETITION FOR SALE OF REAL PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY—JUDGMENTS—ESTOPPEL—APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. A petition by an executor for the sale of real property for the payment of debts cannot be assailed on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, unless it exhibits a total failure to state the necessary facts; and a petition which shows a substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1537, prescribing what such a petition should contain, is sufficient.

2. A petition by an heir to require executors to pay a mortgage indebtedness of their testator, which averred that the executors had sufficient funds to discharge such indebtedness, was opposed by the widow and executors. The court found "that the amount realized as proceeds of the sale of unproductive property, inclusive of the unproductive property still unsold, largely exceeded the amount of the mortgage debt." Held, on a subsequent petition by the executors for the sale of real estate to pay debts, taxes, and costs of administration, that the above finding did not operate as an estoppel against the second proceeding, since it was not necessary to the judgment on the first petition, and was, moreover, simply that the proceeds of sales, "together with the unproductive property then unsold," was sufficient to pay the indebtedness, whereas it appeared that most of said unsold property had been used for other purposes.

3. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1910, providing that, as to judicial orders creating disputable presumptions between the same parties, the parties are deemed to be the same when those between whom the evidence is offered were on opposite sides in the former case, and judgment could have been rendered between them alone, a widow, who joined with the executors of her husband in resisting an application for directions to the executors to pay a mortgage, and charging that they held funds sufficient for that purpose, cannot, on a subsequent petition by the executors for the sale of real estate to pay debts, set up the finding against the executors in the former proceeding as an estoppel against the second petition, since she and the executors in the first proceeding were on the same side.

4. Where a testator directs that his debts be paid from the sales of his unproductive property, an order directing the executor to sell property, a part of which is productive, will not be reversed on appeal, where the sale was not for the payment of debts alone, but also for payment of taxes and large expenses of administration.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Petition by the executors under the will of S. Heydenfeldt, deceased, for an order to sell real estate for the payment of debts and costs of administration. Objections were filed by Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, widow of the testator, and certain other heirs. From an order directing a sale the widow appeals. Affirmed.

Knight & Heggerty and Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. Evans & Meredith and Lester H. Jacobs, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The executors filed a petition for an order directing the sale of certain real property of the estate in order to redeem from sale under a decree of foreclosure certain property that had been sold for indebtedness of the testator, and in order to pay charges and expenses of administration, to pay taxes on the property of the estate, etc. Written objections to the petition were filed by Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, widow of the testator, and certain other heirs. After a full hearing of the matter, the court, on the 12th of January, 1898, made an order directing certain real property to be sold. From this order the widow, Elizabeth A. Heydenfeldt, appeals.

The points mainly relied on here for a reversal are based on asserted insufficiencies of the petition for the sale. No objections of that character were made in the court below; but appellant contends that the petition occupies the position of a complaint in an ordinary action, which may be assailed at any time on the ground that it "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." Assuming, for the purposes of this decision, that this is so, still a complaint cannot be successfully attacked on that ground unless it exhibits a total failure to state the necessary facts. The point that a statement is insufficient which is easily understood as an attempted statement of a particular fact, and is merely shadowed by some uncertainty or want of fullness or aptness of expression, can be reached only by a special demurrer or objection in the court below. And in this case, without enumerating here the various objections to it, it is sufficient to say that the petition shows a substantial compliance in all respects with section 1537, Code Civ. Proc., which prescribes what a petition for the sale of property should contain; and "a substantial compliance is enough." Stuart v. Allen, 16 Cal. 474; Richardson v. Butler, 82 Cal. 174, 23 Pac. 9; Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 666, 667, 31 Pac. 565; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 Pac. 458.

The will of the testator directs that his debts be paid from proceeds of sales of his unproductive property; and appellant contends that the court was estopped, by a finding in a former proceeding, from finding in this present proceeding that the executors have no such proceeds in their hands. The former proceeding was a petition of Zeila O. Helings, a daughter of the testator, for a direction to the executors to pay and discharge certain mortgage indebtedness of the testator, in which she averred that the executors had sufficient funds in their hands to discharge said indebtedness. The executors filed a written opposition to the granting of said petition, and so did the present appellant. In that proceeding the court found, among other things, "that the amount realized as proceeds of sale of the unproductive property of said estate, inclusive of the unproductive property of the estate still unsold, largely exceeds the amount of said mortgage indebtedness, the same amounting in fact to the sum of over seventy thousand ($70,000) dollars." That finding was made on May 27, 1896, and it did not estop the court from finding that there were no funds in the hands of the executors at the time the order now appealed from was made, for various reasons. In the first place, it was not a finding that the executors, even at that time, had, as a product of the sale of unproductive property, the sum of $70,000, but only that the proceeds of sale, together with unproductive property then still unsold, amounted to that sum; and it appears that much of the property has since then been used for other purposes. In the second place, the finding was not necessary to the judgment in that proceeding, and therefore is not an estoppel as against any one. See Lillis v. Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108. In the third place, the present appellant, and the executors who are respondents here, were not on opposite sides in the former proceeding, but were in that proceeding on the same side, and therefore the appellant cannot here invoke the principle of estoppel. Section 1910, Code Civ. Proc. The court found, upon sufficient evidence, that all the property ordered to be sold is unproductive property, except a tract of land in Tulare county of the value of $7,680; and appellant contends that the order is erroneous because the product of the sale of the Tulare land, as said land is not unproductive, cannot be applied to the payment of the debt of the testator here sought to be discharged. But the sale was not ordered for the payment of the debt alone. It includes also large expenses of administration, taxes, etc. If the order should have provided that the proceeds of the sale of the Tulare land should be applied to the expenses of administration alone, and that only the proceeds of the unproductive property should be applied to the debt, the only result would be a modification of the order here directing that the proceeds of the sales of the property be thus segregated. It is not to be presumed, however, that the court below will not make a proper distribution of the proceeds of the sales; and as it is fairly contended that the appellant and other persons interested in the estate have heretofore received unproductive property, and the proceeds thereof, which should have been applied to the payment of the said mortgage indebtedness, we do not feel called upon to embarrass the court below by any specific directions in the premises. The order appealed from is affirmed.

the crime of embezzlement. Writ allowed, and release of petitioner on giving bail ordered.

F. M. Gowan, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner was on the 2d day of December, 1899, convicted of a felony in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to wit, of embezzlement. A judgment was rendered against him that he be imprisoned in the state's prison at San Quentin for the term of seven years. From this judgment he has taken an appeal, and a certificate of probable cause was granted him by the judge of the court in which he was convicted. He made application to said court to be allowed to give bail pending the appeal, and the application was by said court denied. He is now before this court on habeas corpus for the purpose of being allowed to give such bail. Upon the hearing he produced the certificates and affidavits of three respectable physicians, in all of which it is stated that he is suffering with chronic catarrh and asthma, and that confinement in jail would be injurious to his health, and in one of which it is stated that "confinement in jail is injurious to his health and endangers his life." At the hearing there was the additional testimony of Dr. James H. O'Connor, a reputable physician, who testified very fully as to the condition of the petitioner, and stated very positively that, from his frequent examinations of the petitioner, his opinion was that confinement in the jail under the conditions there existing would, if continued two or three months, result fatally. At this hearing, which was on January 13, 1900, it was stated by an attorney who represented the district attorney's office that petitioner and his counsel had refused to allow any physician selected by the district attorney to examine petitioner. As this statement was not denied (the main counsel for the petitioner being absent), it was suggested by the court that the case would be continued to allow an examination of the petitioner by some physician selected by the district attorney. Afterwards a stipulation was entered into by the district attorney and the attorney for petitioner that Dr. J. G. Morrissey was a physician satisfactory to both parties, and that said physician "may make and file his affidavits herein showing the physical condition of Bernard Ward, petitioner herein." Such an examination was afterwards made by Dr. Morrissey, and his affidavit has this day been presented to the court, and is as follows: "I am now, and during all the times hereinafter mentioned was, the city physician in and for the city and county of San Francisco, state of California. I made a physical examination of Bernard Ward, the defendant in the above-entitled matter, at the county jail in the said city and county, on the 19th day of January, 1900. I find said defendant to be suffering from asthma, and his lungs are involved; and the physical conditions now existing at said coun-

BAIL—ILL HEALTH OF DEFENDANT.

The fact that a defendant convicted of the crime of embezzlement is so afflicted with catarrh and asthma as that confinement in the county jail, under the conditions there existing, will endanger his health, and probably be attended with fatal results within a few months, is such an extraordinary circumstance as to make it a proper exercise of discretion to admit him to bail pending an appeal.

In bank. Petition of Bernard Ward for a writ of habeas corpus, for the purpose of obtaining an order that he be allowed to give bail pending his appeal from a conviction of ty jail, where said Ward is now incarcerated, are such that further confinement of said Ward at said jail is fraught with serious impending danger to his health. The balance of chances is that, if said Ward shall continue to be confined for a period of three months or more in said county jail, a fatal result will ensue." We think that in this case circumstances of an extraordinary character appear, within the meaning of former decisions of this court, and that it is a proper exercise of discretion to admit petitioner to bail pending the appeal. It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be admitted to bail, pending his appeal, in the sum of $7,000, the undertaking to be approved by the judge of the superior court in which he was convicted, and that upon the giving of such an undertaking, approved by said judge, the petitioner be discharged from custody.

MORTGAGES—ALLOWANCE AGAINST MORTGAGEE'S ESTATE—CONSIDERATION—EQUITY—MISTAKE—COMPROMISE.

1. A mortgage on real estate was executed and accepted, by mutual mistake, under the supposition that the mortgagor was the owner of the property therein described, when in fact he never had any interest whatever therein. On the death of the mortgagor the mortgagee filed a claim against his estate for the amount of the mortgage debt, without referring to the mortgage, and the same was allowed as an unsecured claim. Held that, since there was in fact no mortgage, the allowance was not void under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for recovering any debt secured by mortgage upon real estate, which must be by foreclosure proceedings.

2. Where a note and mortgage are executed by devisees for the debt of their testator, pursuant to an agreement that the mortgagee shall accept the same in lieu of his "claim and demand" against the estate of the testator, represented by a note and mortgage, which, being lost, are canceled by delivery of a receipt to the devisees reciting that the amount of the new note and mortgage is received as full satisfaction of the original note and mortgage, there is a sufficient consideration to support the note and mortgage made by the devisees.

3. Equity will not grant relief against a note and mortgage made by devisees for the debt of their ancestor, on the ground of mutual mistake, in that the same were made under the mutual belief that the creditor was remitting $400 justly due him, whereas the amount of the note was more than the creditor was entitled to, when both parties have equal opportunity to ascertain the exact amount due, and their ignorance of the truth is the result of gross negligence.

Goodwin & Goodwin, for appellants. Spencer & Raker, for respondent.

• Rehearing denied February 22, 1900.

TEMPLE, J. This action was brought to foreclose a mortgage given by the decedent in her lifetime, and by the other defendants. The important facts are these: Allen Wood, who was then the husband of the intestate, Mary Wood, in 1888 gave to plaintiff, to secure an indebtedness due from himself to plaintiff, his promissory note, and what purported to be a mortgage upon land in which he had no estate, title, or interest of any kind or character, and which was then, and has ever since been, owned and occupied by the defendants Mary E. Long and W. B. Long as and for their homestead. Allen Wood died in 1890, testate. The purport of his will is not made to appear, but counsel on both sides assume that his widow, Mary Wood, and Mary E. Long, who was his daughter and only child, were interested in his estate. He left a solvent estate, and among his assets were (1) a tract of land which was a declared homestead; and (2) 80 acres not included in his homestead. Mary Wood, then his widow, was appointed administratrix with the will annexed, and duly qualified. Notice to creditors was published, and in due time, August 7, 1891, plaintiff presented for allowance his claim founded upon the note, but made no mention of the mortgage. It was duly allowed both by the administratrix and by the judge, and was filed. On the 1st day of December, 1893, the said Mary Wood and the defendants Long executed to plaintiff the mortgage upon which this suit was brought, which was given to secure the debt due from the estate of Allen Wood, and there was no further or other consideration for the same than the indebtedness of the estate of Allen Wood to plaintiff. All parties at the time of the transaction believed that the land covered by the mortgage belonged to Allen Wood when the first mortgage was given, and constituted a part of his estate at the time the note in suit was given; also, that the claim had been properly presented to his administratrix, and was properly allowed, and was a valid claim against the estate, both as to the note and the mortgage. All parties also believed that there was then due upon the original note about $2,900, and that, in accepting the new note and mortgage in lieu of the old one, plaintiff remitted about $400 of the indebtedness to them. As a matter of fact, the amount due plaintiff was then only $2,321. Defendants did not discover any of these mistakes until after this action was commenced. It is not found that Otto believed at the time the new note was given that the land described in the mortgage of Allen Wood belonged to the estate; but he certainly knew that Mary Wood and the defendants were acting under that belief, and he did not inform them of their mistake. In his receipt given in discharge of the old debt, he describes it as a claim secured by mortgage. It is probable that when the first mortgage was accepted by Otto he supposed that the land was the property of Wood, but it is possible that when he presented his claim to the administratrix he had discovered the truth, and therefore did not present the mortgage.

Practically the only defense which the defendants make is that there was no consideration for the new note and mortgage, and this is based upon the proposition that as the obligation of Allen Wood was secured by mortgage, and the mortgage was not described in the claim as the statute directs that it should be, the allowance is absolutely void; and it has been decided in this state that a wife is not even morally bound for the debts of her husband, and that her note for his debt, where there is no new consideration, is void. Rosenberg v. Ford, 85 Cal. 610, 24 Pac. 779; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 193, 33 Pac. 862; Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 1028. Appellants concede that if Otto had a valid claim against Allen Wood's estate, and the claim was paid by the new note and mortgage, there was a valid consideration; but they deny both propositions. Respondent accepts these as the true issues involved, subject to his contention that the court found that there was an adequate consideration, and did not find that there was a mutual mistake. Respondent contends, however, that the debt of Allen Wood to plaintiff was not secured by a mortgage, and therefore it was properly presented and allowed.

Section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, "There can be but one action for recovering any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real estate, which must be in accordance with the provisions of this section," etc. Admittedly, Otto could not waive his security, if security he had, and bring a personal action to recover his debt; and it is also admitted that, if the debt was so secured, it was not presented as required by section 1496 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is also agreed that Allen Wood had neither title nor possession to the mortgaged premises when he gave the mortgage, and that he acquired none subsequently. In reality, it never did amount to security, and yet the instrument was not wholly void. Had Allen Wood acquired any interest in the mortgaged premises during the natural life of the contract, the lien of the mortgage would at once have attached to it. And after-acquired title feeds the security. The policy which led to the enactment of section 726 has been often stated. The matter is discussed in Toby v. Railroad Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550, where attention is called to some actions which could formerly have been maintained by a mortgagee after breach of the contract on the part of the mortgagor. The ends accomplished by the section, it is said, are (1) to confine the mortgagee to one action; (2) to make the security the primary fund from which satisfaction is to be made; and (3) to give plaintiff a judgment for the deficiency, if any, remaining after exhausting the security. Appellants rely almost entirely upon a remark found in Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal.

154, 23 Pac. 1086, as follows: "The proper construction of the language of the statute is that, if the mortgage on its face purports to be a security to the plaintiff, then he must bring his action for foreclosure. This word has reference to the purport of the mortgage as it appears upon its face. The interpretation is not proper when its meaning is sought in something outside of the mortgage instrument." In that case the plaintiff held a third mortgage, and brought a personal action to recover his debt, and claimed the right to disregard the mortgage because, as he contended, the amount due on the prior mortgages exceeded the value of the security. The ruling was to the effect that, so long as he had a lien on real property given as security, he must foreclose. In effect, this is saying that a foreclosure and sale is the special mode provided for determining whether there is anything for a particular mortgagee in the property subject to the lien. This position seems to follow from Biddell v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609, and other cases which hold that the liability of a mortgagor is only to pay any deficiency which there may be after foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises; that is to say, so long as there is an unexecuted lien on property to secure the debt, a personal action cannot be maintained. To inquire whether there is such property as that which the mortgage purports to cover, or whether for any reason it failed to create a lien, is not to violate the rule announced in Barbieri v. Ramelli, nor the policy of the statute. If it can be made to appear that there is no such property as that which the mortgage purports to describe, it would demonstrate that there was no lien, and the debt would not be one secured by mortgage upon real estate. If, when the mortgagor executed the mortgage, he had neither possession, nor any estate, title, or interest of any kind or character in the mortgaged premises, and never at any time acquired any, it is equally evident that the debt is not one secured by a lien upon real estate. One cannot by his contract create a lien upon property which he does not possess, and to which he has no title of any character whatever. If the mortgagor was in good faith asserting a claim to the property, or had color of title, or was asserting an equity in reference to it, perhaps the mortgagee would be compelled to foreclose. Here, confessedly, the mortgagor had no claim of title. Nor was the mistake, if there was one, such as could be corrected in a court of equity. Wood did not, so far as appears, describe the wrong tract of land. He was apparently under the impression that he had acquired title to the land from the United States, whereas his daughter and son-in-law had applied for and had received a patent for the land. It does not appear that there was any misrepresentation or fraud, or any mistake other than that above stated. And, strange as it may appear, the widow, the daughter, and son-in-law thought the land belonged to the estate of Allen Wood when they gave the second mortgage, and supposed they were creating a lien upon property to which they had succeeded as devisees or heirs of Allen Wood, and not upon their own property acquired by purchase. Under such circumstances, it does not violate the policy established by section 726 to allow a personal action upon the note. It is not altogether or literally true, as declared in some of the cases, that the mortgagor only undertakes to pay the deficiency which may remain after the return is made of the result of the sale on foreclosure. He undertakes to pay the debt, but, if there exists a valid lien to secure its payment, the result is the same as though his contract had been only to pay the deficiency. If, however, without fault on the part of the mortgagee, the lien be lost, he may be held for the entire debt. Savings Bank of San Diego Co. v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 54 Pac. 273. And if, by some mistake, he does not get a lien upon anything, the rule should be the same. Why should he go through the senseless form of foreclosure, when confessedly he does not really have a lien? It may even be doubted whether he could or would be permitted formally to foreclose, and, in pursuance of a decree, offer for sale land belonging to a third party, when his mortgagor neither had nor asserted any title or claim, in law or equity, with reference to the property. Such a proceeding would tend to cloud land titles, and surely the policy of the law cannot require it.

The claim as presented and allowed being a valid claim against the estate of Allen Wood, deceased, it is admitted that it was a sufficient consideration for the new note and mortgage, provided it was surrendered and given up as paid by the new note. It is contended that there was no express agreement that the acceptance of the new note should operate as payment of the old note. It is averred in the answer, and found, that plaintiff importuned [Mrs. Mary Wood for a new note in lieu of the old, and threatened to bring suit upon his note and mortgage, and put the estate to great expense; that, to prevent this, Mrs. Wood proposed to execute the new mortgage "in lieu of the claim and demand of said Otto against the estate of Allen Wood, deceased, if said Otto would forego the foreclosure of said mortgage and surrender the note," etc.; and that Otto accepted said proposition, and "pursuant thereto the note and mortgage described in the complaint herein were executed and delivered to plaintiff." It is also found that, before the new note and mortgage were delivered, Mrs. Mary Wood was informed that the old note had been lost, and therefore could not be given up, and thereupon Otto gave a receipt as follows: "Law Office of Goodwin & Goodwin. Susanville, Cal., March 26, 1894. Received of Mrs. Allen Wood, administratrix of the estate of Allen Wood, deceased, the sum of twenty-eight hundred sixty-two dollars, being payment full and complete satisfaction and discharge of claim of undersigned against said estate for promissory note and mortgage dated the 18th day of December, 1888, for $4,230³⁰/₁₀₀, and recorded December 18, 1888, in Vol. E of Mortgages, pages 332-3 and 4, Lassen county records. [Signed] Anthony Otto." The point is that the receipt specifies that it is received in payment of the claim, but not of the note, which, it is said, left him free to foreclose the mortgage, which he might do though the claim against the estate were not presented or allowed. There is nothing in this. Satisfaction and discharge of the claim on the note is payment of the note, unless it is otherwise expressed.

Appellants contend that there was a mutual mistake as to other matters, and that the contract was based upon mutual misapprehension. The main point is that in the compromise all parties understood that Otto was remitting $400 justly due him, and one inducement for the defendants to give new security for the debt was their conviction that thereby they were gaining $400. They thought Otto was paying them $400 as an inducement. Unless Otto could have made his money out of the estate, there was no foundation for such belief. Otto's claim had been filed. It included a copy of the note and the credits. In Otto's affidavit it was stated that the amount due was $2,295.23, which, it seems, was about $50 too much. The misapprehension or mistake made by Otto was in regard to matters in reference to which Mrs. Wood and her attorney were as well informed as Otto was. Their ignorance of the truth was the result of gross negligence. The court rendered judgment only for the sum actually due. The failure of Mrs. Wood and her attorneys to compute the interest shows that they did not consider that a matter of much consequence in the compromise. As it is found that the estate was solvent, and it is assumed here, as it must have been in making the compromise, that Mrs. Wood and the defendants were the only persons interested in the estate of Allen Wood, they were practically getting an extension of credit for their own debt. Under the circumstances, I think defendants should not be relieved from their obligation. The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1900.)
INSURANCE—CHANGE OF TITLE—NOTICE—RE-INSURANCE—PROFIT AND LOSS.

1. B. procured S. to transfer certain insured premises to T., in anticipation that the latter would accept the same in satisfaction of a debt due him from B. The deed from S. was handed to B., and recorded by him; but, before T. had accepted the conveyance, the building on the premises was burned, and thereupon T. refused to accept, and B. reconveyed to S. Held, that there was no change of ownership in the property which necessitated notice to the insurer, under a mortgage clause in the policy requiring the mortgagee to notify the insured of any such change.

2. A contract by which a fire insurance company undertakes to adjust and pay losses under the policies of another company, thereby reinsured by it, as it would under its own policies if issued direct to the said assured, in pursuance of which it assumes the management of the business of the latter company, when assented to by the creditors of the retiring company, makes the latter and the reinsuring company jointly liable for a loss under a risk thus reinsured.

3. Where the risks of a fire insurance company are reinsured in another company, under a contract whereby the latter assumes the management and control of the business of the original insurer, and agrees to make adjustment and prompt payment of its losses, proofs of loss under a policy issued by said original insurer may be made to the reinsuring company.

Temple, J., dissenting.

In bank. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 56 Pac. 50.

VAN DYKE, J. This action is brought jointly against the two companies defendant upon a fire insurance policy issued by defendant the American Insurance Company September 6, 1893. The plaintiff is mortgagee of the land upon which the building insured was situated. Judgment went in his favor in the court below, and the appeal is taken from the judgment, and an order denying a new trial.

At the date of the issuance of the policy the legal title to the land was in James E. Gordon, who had purchased it from J. F. Sullivan, who, prior to the sale to Gordon, had executed a mortgage to the plaintiff to secure the sum of over $1,100. The amount of the policy was $1,000, and the loss, if any should occur, was made payable to the mortgagee. The mortgage clause accompanying the policy provided "that this insurance, as to the interest of the mortgagee or trustee only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, or by the occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by the terms of this policy: * * * provided, also, that the mortgagee or trustee shall notify this company of any change of ownership or increase of hazard which shall come to his or their knowledge, and shall have permission for such change of ownership or increase of hazard duly indorsed on this policy." In December, 1893, Gordon reconveyed the premises back to Sullivan, and assigned the policy to him, and this transfer and assignment were approved by the company. The premises insured were located in the city of Los Angeles, and the policy of insurance was issued by J. K. Mulkey, the agent of the American Insurance Company residing there at that time. On May 9, 1894, one W. W. Beach, a tenant occupying the premises insured, had some negotiations with Sullivan, the owner, in San Francisco, looking to an exchange of some of his property for the insured property at Los Angeles; and, as a result of such negotiations, Beach requested Sullivan to make a deed of the insured premises to one C. S. Taylor. It seems that Beach expected that Taylor would accept the deed in satisfaction of certain claims which Taylor held against him (Beach). The deed, after being executed by Sullivan and his wife, was handed to Beach, who had it recorded in Los Angeles. Taylor, however, repudiated the transaction, and refused to accept the deed. The building insured was destroyed by fire on May 19th, 10 days after the date of the deed from Sullivan and wife to Taylor; and a short time thereafter Beach, who held a general power of attorney from Taylor, as such attorney executed a deed back to Sullivan.

It is claimed on the part of the appellants (and this is really the main ground of defense) that the execution of the deed by Sullivan, as stated, amounted to a change of ownership of the property, and that the defendants did not receive the notice thereof as required by the conditions of the mortgage clause. But the transaction in question did not amount to a change of ownership of the property, and the finding of the court accordingly is abundantly supported by the testimony. The paper executed by Sullivan and wife never took effect as a deed to Taylor. "A grant takes effect, so as to vest the interest intended to be transferred only upon its delivery by the grantor." Civ. Code, § 1054. In Hastings v. Vaughn, 5 Cal. 316, it was said: "Delivery is a question of fact, depending more upon intention than upon the mode of fulfilling the intention." In Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 547, 4 Pac. 473, and 8 Pac. 46, it was said: "The act, solemn and authentic, done in writing in form apt for the conveyance of land, with signature and seal, does not take effect as a deed until delivery with intent that it shall operate. The intent with which it is delivered is important. This restricts or enlarges the effect of the instrument." Even where the grantee is in possession of the deed, though that may raise a presumption of delivery, still "it may be shown by parol evidence that a deed in possession of the grantee was not delivered." Devl. Deeds, §§ 294, 295. The intention as well on the part of the grantee as the grantor is the controlling element in the question of delivery. Black v. Sharkey, 104 Cal. 279, 37 Pac. 939. Beach testifies that he proposed to Taylor to secure the building by a trade with Sullivan, if possible, and turn it over to Taylor to call certain accounts square, and that he agreed to it; and after getting the property he says he had it deeded to Taylor, but that it burned down before he heard from him, and that he declined to take it. "Q. Did you deliver the deed to him? A. I did not. Q. Was there ever any delivery of the deed to him? A. I simply sent it to the recorder, and it was recorded.

at my request. He refused to receive it, and I turned it over to Dr. Sullivan when I got the property back." He further testifies that the object in reconveying it to Sullivan was to take the record title out of Mr. Taylor; that the consideration for the deed from Sullivan was Beach's, entirely. Taylor paid nothing for the property. The transaction was entirely in the interest of Beach, and, in handing the paper over to Beach under such circumstances, there was no delivery of the grant to Taylor. An agent or trustee cannot transact business entirely for his own interest, and bind the principal or cestui que trust, without his knowledge or consent at the time, or subsequent acquiescence and ratification. There being no change of ownership resulting from the transaction referred to, it follows that there was no necessity for any notice.

In March, 1894, a written contract was entered into between the American and Northwestern, by which, in consideration of certain money and property given by the former to the latter, and payment by the American to the Northwestern of a certain pro rata of unearned premiums, the Northwestern assumed all the liabilities of the American upon all its policies, among which, it is admitted, the policy in question in this action was included. In the contract between the companies the Northwestern covenanted that it "will make as prompt adjustments and payments of loss, if any, under any and all of its policies of the said American Insurance Company hereby reinsured," as it would under its own policies if issued direct to said assured. Thereafter all the agencies of the American Company in California were revoked, and the Northwestern took the entire control and management of all matters arising out of said policies, and the adjustment of losses in cases of fire, and the American Company practically disappeared from business. Some years prior to this agreement the American Company had filed in the office of the insurance commissioner of this state a designation of one Ed. E. Potter as its agent; but, a few days after the fire, Sullivan went to see Potter, who informed him that he was no longer the agent of the American, except perhaps for the purpose of settling with the Northwestern Company. The proofs of loss were made within five days after the fire, and were directed formally to the American Company, but were sent to George W. Turner, at San Francisco, who was the general agent of the Northwestern. The day after the fire, however, the plaintiff, as the mortgagee, called on Mulkey, as the agent of the American Company, and informed him of the fire. Thereupon, for the first time, Mulkey stated that he was no longer agent of the said company, that said company's policies on this coast had been assumed by the Northwestern, and that Betts & Silent, of Los Angeles, were the agents. Soon afterwards Mr. T. A. Nerney called on the plaintiff, and informed him that he was the agent and adjuster of the Northwestern, and took him to the office of Betts & Silent, and there prepared and caused proof of loss to be made in due form, which proof of loss he sent to Turner, as already stated. Turner testifies that after the contract between the companies: "I had charge of the business covered by that contract, including the risk of policy sued for here, and now before this court. As to this policy sued on, I began to handle it a week or ten days after the fire. Just as soon as I received the proof of loss from Mr. Nerney, I went to work on the subject, and called on Mr. Sullivan." He further testified that Mr. Potter had called in all the agencies of the American Insurance Company, and that the Northwestern, "through its agents and under my general agency, had been attending to all the affairs under the policies of insurance issued by the American Insurance Company's agents under this agreement since about April 1, 1894, and it was under that agreement, and in pursuance of the duties which were assumed under that agreement, that I went to see Dr. Sullivan in regard to this policy; and Mr. Nerney attended to the taking of the proofs of loss on behalf of the American Insurance Company at Los Angeles from A. L. Whitney, the plaintiff herein. I, as agent of the Northwestern National Insurance Company, had authority to receive the proofs of loss under this policy of the American Insurance Company." After Turner had learned from Sullivan that the latter had made a deed to Taylor, and supposing therefrom that there had been a change of ownership of the property, he returned the proofs of loss, on the presumption, presumably, that his company was relieved from liability for want of notice of such change of ownership. It is argued by appellants' counsel that the contract between the companies referred to, and their subsequent action in carrying it out, amounted to nothing more than a naked contract of reinsurance, under the Code, which reads as follows: "A contract of reinsurance is one by which an insurer procures a third person to insure him against loss or liability by reason of such original insurance." Civ. Code, § 2646. The facts in this case show the contract in question to be much broader than a mere technical reinsurance. In Arnold v. Lyman, 17 Mass. 400, it is said: "The promise being, not to Hutchins expressly, but general in its form, the assent of the creditors made them parties to the promise; and this assent is sufficiently proved, as respects the plaintiffs, by their bringing an action upon the contract." See, also, Morgan v. Mining Co., 37 Cal. 534; Flint v. Cadenasso, 64 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 62; Lockwood v. Canfield, 20 Cal. 126. The finding of the court that under the said agreement between the companies defendant the Northwestern National Insurance Company assumed and undertook the care, control, and management of the business and risks of the said American Insurance Company in this state, including the policy of insurance sued on herein, is fully supported by the evidence. The holders of policies issued by the American Company in this state could avail themselves of said promise and undertaking made for their benefit by the Northwestern Company, and, as said in the cases cited, the bringing of suit is sufficient evidence of assent on the part of the plaintiff to said agreement and undertaking. The law creates the privity necessary for the maintenance of the action. The Northwestern was jointly liable with the American on said policy, and the proof of loss was sufficient.

The other objections to the findings, not being supported by the evidence, are unimportant or immaterial. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. Where an offer of evidence includes many different propositions, grouped together, one of which is incompetent, irrelevant, or immaterial, an obligation to the whole as inadmissible on such ground must be sustained.

2. A motion to strike evidence, which is so framed as to include competent testimony, and also the moving party's own evidence, should be overruled.

3. Where plaintiff, a school teacher, sues on an express contract made in 1894 for a designated sum per month for six months, evidence of a contract made with a different party in 1890 is irrelevant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. C. Swafford against the board of education of the city of Petaluma and others to recover damages for breach of contract. There was a judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. Walker, for appellant. J. P. Rogers and F. A. Meyer, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This is an appeal from a judgment, and an order denying motion for new trial. The complaint alleges that in the month of December, 1894, the defendant, as a corporation, "by a resolution, duly elected and employed the said plaintiff as teacher of the Petaluma High School" for the term of six months, commencing on the 1st day of January, 1895; "that the salary and compensation attached to the position of teacher of said school, and which the said plaintiff was to receive, according to the terms of said resolution and contract of employment, was one hundred and sixty-five dollars per month for said term of six months"; that plaintiff entered upon his duties as such teacher, and taught said school up to February 20, 1895, when defendant paid him $247.50, being his salary in full up to said time; and that the defendant then wrongfully discharged him, and refused to allow him to complete his term under his contract. Damages are asked in the sum of $742.50; being the amount that it is claimed plaintiff would have earned, at the rate agreed upon, if allowed to complete his term according to contract. The case was tried without a jury. The learned judge of the court below, after hearing the evidence, found that the defendant never, by resolution or otherwise, employed the plaintiff for the term specified, or for any other term, and that no fixed salary or compensation was attached to the position of such teacher; that the defendant never, wrongfully or in any manner, prevented plaintiff from performing any services or duties; and that plaintiff has not been damaged by defendants in any sum or at all. Judgment was accordingly entered against plaintiff March 7, 1898. The notice of appeal from the judgment was not served or filed till April 11, 1899; and counsel for defendants object to the appeal from the judgment being considered, because not taken within the time prescribed by statute. The plaintiff's attorney concedes that the appeal was not taken in time, and therefore the appeal from the judgment will not be considered. This leaves for consideration the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial. The attorney for plaintiff, in his opening brief, says that he "will not touch upon matters respecting the judgment, in so far as a reviewing of the evidence is concerned, but will direct attention to errors of law upon which appellant relies." It will therefore be assumed that the findings are supported by the evidence, and that the judgment is the legal conclusion from the facts found.

It is urged as the principal ground for reversal of the order denying the new trial that the plaintiff offered to prove that by resolution of defendant passed on the 30th day of June, 1890, the salary of the principal of the said high school was fixed at $165 per month, and that the court erred in refusing to hear such proof. The record illustrates the position in which counsel are often placed by offering to prove certain facts in order to save exceptions, instead of asking the questions and taking a ruling upon the questions so asked. In this case it appears that after the close of defendants' evidence the plaintiff was called in rebuttal. After some discussion as to whether or not the offered evidence was in rebuttal, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, allowed the plaintiff's attorney to offer it as part of his evidence in chief. The offer covers some five folios of the transcript, and it is not necessary here to give it in full. Among other things, counsel for plaintiff "offered to prove" that on the 30th day of June, 1890, I. S. Crawford was principal of the Petaluma High School, and continued as such until the 29th day of June, 1891; that by resolution passed on the 30th day of June, 1890, the salary of the principal of said school was fixed at $165 per month; that Prof. Crawford continued to teach until June 29, 1891, when his resignation was received, and on motion accepted; that the board then proceeded to ballot for his successor; that the names of several candidates were proposed, and, upon ballot being taken, plaintiff was elected as successor of said Crawford; that plaintiff thereupon entered upon his duties as teacher, and continued to teach up to the 16th day of February, 1895, receiving $165 per month during all that time; that the salary of plaintiff was paid by warrants drawn by the board of education upon the treasurer of the city of Petaluma. Counsel for plaintiff offered to prove all the above facts "by the minutes of the board of education and other testimony." The offer was objected to as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The objection was sustained, and plaintiff's counsel excepted. We think the ruling correct. The offer included many different propositions, grouped together; and if the proof of any one proposition was incompetent, irrelevant, or immaterial, the ruling should be sustained. It certainly does not appear to us that evidence as to one Crawford being principal of the high school in June, 1890; that he continued to teach until June, 1891, and then resigned; that the resignation was accepted; that several candidates were proposed to fill the vacancy; that the salary of the plaintiff was paid by warrants drawn on the treasurer, — would have been material or relevant to any issue before the court. Plaintiff had alleged an express contract, made in December, 1894, under and by the terms of which he was to receive $165 per month for six months. There was no issue as to the amount of plaintiff's salary. He received $165 per month for the time he was employed. He claimed employment under an express contract made in December, 1894. A contract made with a different party in June, 1890, would not tend to prove the express contract alleged.

There is evidence in the record as to a special meeting of the board of education of Petaluma on February 16, 1895, for the purpose of investigating certain charges of unprofessional conduct preferred against plaintiff as principal of said high school. It is claimed that the court erred in refusing to strike from the record all evidence as to such special meeting, for the reason that the same was illegal and called without proper notice. We fail to find in the record any motion to strike out such evidence. After the counsel for defendants had examined one Haskell in regard to various matters, including the said special meeting, counsel for plaintiff moved "to strike out the testimony thus far introduced, partially upon the ground that it appears that no notice had been given to this member of the board of education." It does not appear that any motion was made to strike out the evidence as to the special meeting. The motion was broad enough to include all the evidence in the case, including that of plaintiff. The motion was correctly denied. We find no error in the record, and advise that the order be affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reason given in the foregoing opinion, the order is affirmed.

GILLON v. NORTHERN ASSUR. CO. OF LONDON & ABERDEEN. (Sac. 635.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1900.)

INSURANCE—TRANSFER OF INSURED PROPERTY CONTRARY TO PROVISIONS OF POLICY—COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION—WAIVER—PROOFS OF LOSS.

1. An owner of insured property conveyed the same to her brother, to avoid the expense of probate, and died a few days thereafter. Before her death the agent of the insurance company was notified of the deed. Shortly after her death the property was destroyed by fire. The policy contained the usual provisions avoiding the insurance on change of title. Held that, as there was no title in insured or her estate at the time of the loss, the notice could in no way avail in recovering the insurance by the estate.

2. A suit commenced within the 60 days given by a policy of insurance for payment of the loss, after proofs are made, is prematurely brought.

3. Where plaintiff, in his complaint on an insurance policy, alleges that proofs of loss were furnished defendant, he cannot urge that proofs of loss were waived.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Solano county.

Action by P. Gillon, as administrator of the estate of Mary McNulty, deceased, against the Northern Assurance Company of London & Aberdeen. Judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John M. Gregory, for appellant. Van Ness & Redman, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action on a fire insurance policy. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying him a new trial. The policy was issued to Mary McNulty, and by it her two frame houses and one shed were insured for $1,025, and her household furniture and wearing apparel for $300. Thereafter Mary McNulty, by deed, conveyed the said houses and shed, and land on which they were situated, to her brother, P. Gillon, to avoid the expense of probating her estate. A few days later, Mary McNulty died; and thereupon her said brother took possession of said real property, and held the same for nearly two months, when the whole of said personal property and two of the buildings were destroyed, and the other building was badly damaged, by fire. Before the death of his sister, Gillon notified defendant's Vallejo agent of the transfer of the buildings to himself, but no transfer of the policy was ever effected. The personal property belonged to Mary McNulty at her death, and when destroyed was a part of her estate. Immediately after the fire, Gillon notified defendant thereof, and an adjuster was sent to ascertain the amount of the loss. During his investigations the adjuster obtained knowledge of the said transfer to Gillon, and reported the same to defendant. The next thing of importance in reference to the matter occurred between the attorneys for the respective parties. Forty-one days after the fire the attorneys of defendant wrote to the attorneys of plaintiff, saying that defendant was not liable for the injury to the buildings, giving reasons therefor; and as to the personal property they said, "We will endeavor to reach a settlement with you in regard to the loss of the personal property as soon as a representative of the estate has been appointed." Nothing further was done until upward of seven months thereafter, when the plaintiff, as administrator, made a demand in writing for the whole amount of the insurance; and to this demand the attorneys for defendant replied by letter, the material part of which is as follows: "We stated to your attorney, Mr. Hall, as far back as last August, that we were ready to take up for adjustment the loss on the second and third items of the policy—the personal property—as soon as an administrator of her estate had been appointed. Why you have delayed taking any action in the matter for this long period of time, we do not know, and your failure to present the statement and proof required by the policy within sixty days after the loss has probably worked a forfeiture of all rights under the policy. But, without regard to this failure on your part to comply with the terms of the policy, the company is now, as it always has been, ready to settle and pay the loss on the personal property. In order that it may be advised as to the extent and nature of this loss, it will be necessary for you to furnish to the company the verified statement called for by the policy; giving, among other things, an itemized list of the insured furniture and wearing apparel claimed to have been damaged or destroyed by the fire, the cash value of each item thereof and the amount of loss thereon." Eighty-five days subsequent to the date of this letter, and one year, lacking seven days, after the fire, the plaintiff for the first time furnished defendant with a proof of loss, and three days thereafter this suit was begun. The policy contained the usual provisions voiding the contract of insurance in case of any change of title in the property insured; requiring proof of loss within sixty days after a fire, and that nothing should be payable until sixty days after such proof of loss had been received by the company. The complaint alleged that "more than sixty days prior to the commencement of this action the defendant was furnished with due proofs of said loss for and on behalf of said estate." and no effort was made to amend such complaint.

1. The conveyance of the buildings by the insured operated to transfer the title in the property to Gillon either at the date of the deed, or at the time of the grantor's death. It is unnecessary to consider at which of these dates the title vested in Gillon, for both occurred before the fire. It is not contended that this deed was invalid, or that it did not transfer the property to Gillon, but all that appellant says about the clause as to a transfer of title is this: "We claim that the notice to defendant's Vallejo agent before the fire was sufficient to relieve us from the operation of this clause; the transfer being in the best of faith, and the risk becoming no greater by the transfer." The appellant evidently forgets that this suit is brought on behalf of the estate of Mrs. McNulty, and not on behalf of Gillon. The notice of the transfer could in no way assist Mrs. McNulty or her estate in recovering insurance on property, the title to which she had parted with contrary to the provisions of the policy. Good faith in the transaction could not alter its effect as a violation of such provisions.

2. The appellant was not entitled to recover for the personal property, for the following reasons: It has been held by this court in two well-considered cases that a complaint in an action on a policy of fire insurance which failed to show that proofs had been made, in accordance with the provisions of the policy, 60 days before action begun, did not state a cause of action on such policy. Doyle v. Insurance Co., 44 Cal. 264; Cowan v. Same, 78 Cal. 181, 20 Pac. 408. In another case it is held that a nonsuit was properly granted in an action on a policy similar to this, where the evidence showed that the suit was commenced before proofs were made. McCormack v. Insurance Co., 78 Cal. 469, 21 Pac. 14. It is undoubtedly the settled law that a suit commenced within the 60 days given by the policy for payment of the loss, after proofs are made, is prematurely brought. This rule is recognized by appellant in his complaint when he states that due proofs of loss were furnished more than 60 days before the commencement of this action, but the evidence and findings are against him on this proposition. Of course, this proof of loss may, like any condition in a contract, be waived. But here, again, both the evidence and the findings as to the waiver are against appellant's contention. The denial of liability as to the real property, and, coupled with it, the express admission of liability as to the personal property, could only be treated as a waiver as to such real property. It surely could not be treated as a waiver of proof of loss as to the personal property. Insurance Co. v. Winfield (Kan. App.) 51 Pac. 567. Section 1486, Civ. Code, cited by appellant, has no application to this subject. The letters in evidence show a waiver only as to the time within which proofs of loss as to the personal property may be furnished. They show no waiver of the making of the proofs, but, on the contrary, it is insisted in one of them, at least, that such proofs be thereafter made, even though the time for making them under the policy had expired. There being no waiver of the requirement of proofs of loss as to the personal property, and certainly no waiver of the provision of the policy that the loss was not payable until 60 days after its ascertainment and proof, we think the trial court was right in its conclusions, and that the action as to the personal property was prematurely brought. If the appellant were correct in his contentions as to a waiver being disclosed by the evidence, it is still difficult to see how we could be justified in disturbing the findings and judgment in the case, when appellant nowhere in his complaint counts on such waiver, but alleges the actual furnishing of proofs, and that they were furnished 60 days before action begun. Rogers v. Kimball, 121 Cal. 247, 53 Pac. 648. We advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

FERRIS v. BAKER et al. (L. A. 811.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 3, 1900.)

MINING PARTNERSHIP—AGENCY—EVIDENCE—APPEAL—FINAL JUDGMENT.

1. On appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, the court will regard as proven whatever relevant facts plaintiff's evidence tended to prove.

2. Where plaintiff alleged a mining partnership with a wife, based on an agreement with her husband as her agent, evidence of statements by the husband that he was his wife's agent was inadmissible.

3. In an action for dissolution of an alleged mining partnership, plaintiff having shown that he purchased a one-half interest therein from the former owner, through a husband, who caused the other one-half to be deeded to his wife, and that plaintiff and the husband, who claimed to act as agent for his wife, worked on the mine, extracting mineral, and that the wife had made statements to third parties that she owned an interest in the mine and that her husband was her agent, it was error to nonsuit plaintiff on the grounds that he had shown no partnership, since the jury might have found that a partnership existed, within the meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 2511, 2512, providing that a mining partnership exists when persons own a mine for the purpose of working it, and actually do work the mine, though no express agreement of partnership exists.

4. An order granting a nonsuit, entered on the minutes, merely reciting that the motion was made and granted, but not purporting to be a dismissal of the action or a judgment, was not a final judgment, within Code Civ. Proc. § 939 (amended by St. 1897, p. 55), limiting the time that appeals may be taken from final judgments to six months; and hence an appeal taken from a formal judgment of nonsuit entered afterwards was allowable, though not taken until more than six months after the entry of the first order.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Action by C. E. Ferris against Blik Baker and others. On a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Brown & Newby, for appellant. Brown & Miller, for respondents.

BUTT, C. Action to obtain the dissolution of an alleged mining partnership, an accounting, a sale of the mining property owned by the alleged partners, and the repayment to plaintiff of money contributed by him in excess of his proper share in the business of working the mine. The court below was of opinion that plaintiff failed at the trial to prove the existence of a mining partnership, and rendered judgment of nonsuit against him.

"A mining partnership exists when two or more persons who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it and extracting the mineral therefrom actually engage in working the same." Civ. Code, § 2511. "An express agreement to become partners * * * is not necessary to the formation or existence of a mining partnership. The relation arises from the ownership of shares or interests in the mine, and working the same for the purpose of extracting the minerals therefrom." Id. § 2512. The property in question here, called the Philadelphia Mine or Mining Claim, was owned by the plaintiff and the defendant Blik Baker in equal shares,—each one-half. Said Blik is a married woman, the wife of one E. N. Baker. Work on said mining claim, for the purpose of extracting the mineral therefrom, was begun in the month of June, 1897, and was continued until December following. The business thus prosecuted comprises the transactions of which plaintiff prays an accounting. The question is whether said Blik Baker engaged in said business jointly with the plaintiff. If she did, then, under the law expressed in said sections of the Civil Code, the mining partnership existed; otherwise, it did not. The evidence produced by plaintiff upon that point was, in substance, as follows: Early in June, 1897, the purchase of said mining claim from the former owner was effected through the instrumentality of said E. N. Baker. As to a one-half interest, such purchase was on behalf of the plaintiff, and E. N. Baker caused the deed of the property to be made to plaintiff and said Blik Baker as grantees, he representing to plaintiff that he was the agent of his wife. Said E. N. Baker and the plaintiff then agreed that they would develop the mine and extract ore therefrom. The work aforesaid proceeded pursuant to this agreement. On July 20, 1897, said E. N. and Blik Baker jointly executed a written contract with one I. N. Inskeep, whereby they agreed to sell and convey to said Inskeep an undivided one-eighth interest in the said mining claim. This contract contained a clause by which the vendors agreed that Inskeep should "be at no expense for assessment or development work" on the mine up to the time the same should "begin to produce," and that they would pay all such expenses. A witness for plaintiff testified that he heard a conversation between Mrs. Baker and one Pepper in August, 1897, "relative to the Philadelphia mine"; that Pepper "asked her if Mr. Baker owned the property, or if she owned it, and she remarked that the property was hers individually, but that Mr. Baker did her business for her,—was her agent in the matter." Defendants admitted that said Pepper, if present in court, would testify to the same effect.

In reviewing the action of the court on the motion for nonsuit, we must regard as proved whatever facts, relevant to the issue, the evidence for the plaintiff tended to prove. Dow v. Mining Co., 31 Cal. 629. Plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the facts in testimony, "and the presumptions which might reasonably be drawn from them." De Ro v. Cordes, 4 Cal. 117; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 309, 27 Pac. 737. We leave out of view any declarations of E. N. Baker as to his agency for his wife. They were incompetent, as the court below rightly held, to establish the fact of agency against her, though competent for the purpose of showing that plaintiff dealt with E. N. Baker as agent, and not as a principal. But we have seen that there was evidence that Mrs. Baker joined her husband in a contract to sell an interest in the mining claim to Inskeep. By the same instrument she agreed with Inskeep that she would pay all expenses of development work on the mine until it should "begin to produce"; and later she declared, in reference to the mine, that she owned the property, "but her husband was her agent in the matter." From these circumstances, it seems to us that a jury, or the court sitting to determine the fact, might reasonably deduce the inferences that Mrs. Baker ratified the acquisition of the mining claim by E. N. Baker as her agent; that the work she promised Inskeep she would pay for was the work then in progress on the mine, rather than work to be done in the indefinite future; and, this work having been authorized by her husband, that she was cognizant of what he had done, and adopted it as done on her behalf. Perhaps none of these are necessary inferences from the facts proved, but, as the evidence tended to justify them, they are to be regarded for present purposes as facts established. As such, they tend to show the relation of mining partners between plaintiff and Mrs. Baker. It was error, therefore, to order a nonsuit.

Defendants make the point that the appeal was taken too late and for that reason can not be considered. The order, such as it was, granting the motion for nonsuit, was made and entered in the minutes of the court, and noted in the clerk's register of actions, on December 6, 1898. Formal judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff, directing that he take nothing and that defendants recover costs, was entered May 3, 1899. The appeal was taken July 21, 1899. It is provided by section 581, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1897 (St. 1897, p. 98), that the dismissal of an action, or a judgment of nonsuit, for failure by the plaintiff to prove a sufficient case for the jury, "shall be made by order of the court entered upon the minutes thereof, and shall be effective for all purposes when so entered." Section 939, Code Civ. Proc., amended by St. 1897, p. 55, provides that an appeal may be taken from a final judgment within six months after the entry thereof. Defendants urge that the appeal should have been taken within six months after the order allowing the motion for nonsuit was entered in the minutes of the court. The order in this case was a mere narration by the clerk as follows: "Defendants move the court for nonsuit on the grounds stated. Said motion is argued, and thereupon granted." The order did not show what were the grounds of the motion. It did not purport to be a dismissal of the action, nor a judgment of any kind, and was in fact but a memorandum affording data from which a judgment or proper order might be drafted, similar to the minute made when final judgment is announced, directing that it pass for one party or the other. Obviously, no execution could have issued on such an order. We are not called upon to say what would have been its effect under said section 581, as regards the time limited for appeal, if it had purported to make final disposition of the action. There was no such disposition until the entry of the judgment on May 3, 1899, and the appeal was in time.

One or two other points made by defendants have had our careful consideration. They do not seem sufficiently important to require special notice. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

FOX v. SUTTON et al. (S. F. 1,881.)

INTERPLEADER—EXECUTORS—CLAIMS BY ALLEGED HEIRS.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 386, as amended in 1881, providing that, when there are conflicting claims made on a person in relation to personal property, he may bring an action to compel conflicting claimants to interplead, an executor having certain money in his hands as assets of the estate, to which there are conflicting claims, may bring an action without depositing in court the money in controversy.

2. Where a decree ordering distribution by an executor has been rendered, the executor, as against the distributees and third parties, who are not bound by the decree of distribution, but are claiming the estate, can file a bill of interpleader, both as executor and individually.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Charles N. Fox, individually and as executor of Stephen Powell, against A. M. Sutton and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Alice H. Burdick and Henry C. Ross, Jr., appeal. Affirmed.

J. H. McKune and Henry C. Ross, Jr., for appellants. R. S. Gray, for respondent Fox. J. H. Craddock, for respondents Sutton and others.

VAN DYKE, J. On the death of Stephen Powell Burdick there was on deposit in the First National Bank of Oakland some $5,281.64, standing in the name of "S. P. Burdick, Atty." This money was claimed by the plaintiff, as executor, as belonging to and being part of the estate of said Stephen Powell Burdick, and was also claimed by the defendants A. M. Sutton and Arthur W. Burdick, as alleged trustees, by title adverse to said estate. Under these circumstances, the bank refused to pay over the money to either the executor or the trustees unless the claims of such respective parties were first adjudicated. In order to save expense, and in view of the uncertainty of litigation, the claimants agreed by stipulation that the money should be paid over to the executor, subject only to such claim as the said trustees might have to the residue after administration. Upon this stipulation being entered into, the money was turned over to the executor, and in his final account it is stated that the balance of said money remaining in his hands amounted to $1,657.90. Upon the settlement of the executor's final account, Alice H. Burdick, surviving widow of the deceased, petitioned the court for distribution of the one-half of said sum to her, on the ground that the whole of said money so received by the executor was community property, and belonged to the estate of her deceased husband. The defendants Sutton and Arthur W. Burdick, as said trustees, opposed said petition of distribution, and asked that the money be turned over to them under the terms of their trust deed. The court denied the petition of the defendants Sutton and Arthur W. Burdick, and also denied their motion for an order staying distribution until they could, by action in a court of competent jurisdiction, have their respective claims to said money adjudicated and determined, and thereupon ordered distribution according to the prayer of the petitioner, Alice H. Burdick. This court dismissed the appeal of said Sutton and Arthur W. Burdick as trustees, and of said Burdick in his own right, saying: "They are not named in the will, and claim no rights under it, and have presented no claim against the estate. They are not, and could not have been, aggrieved persons. The order refusing to postpone the decree of final distribution was not appealable." In re Burdick's Estate, 112 Cal. 396, 44 Pac. 734. While said appeal was pending and undetermined, said Sutton and Arthur W. Burdick commenced an action in the superior court in the city and county of San Francisco against the plaintiff herein, individually and as executor of said estate, for the recovery of said $828.97 which had been so ordered distributed to said Alice H. Burdick. After the dismissal of said appeal, the appellants herein, Alice H. Burdick and Henry C. Ross, Jr., her attorney, applied to the superior court of Alameda county, in which the settlement of the estate was pending, for an order on the plaintiff, Fox, as such executor, to pay over the money which had been ordered to be distributed, or show cause why he should not be punished for contempt in failing to do so. The plaintiff, Fox, thereupon, as such executor and individually, brought this action. In his complaint the facts, some of which have been referred to, are fully stated; and it is averred in said complaint that the plaintiff has no interest in the said $828.97, only as to which of the defendants shall receive the same, and is ready to deliver the same to the person entitled thereto, and prays that said defendants may be required to interplead together for the purpose of determining their respective claims to the said $828.97, and upon delivering the same to the party adjudged by the court to be entitled thereto, or upon paying the same under and in obedience to any determination that may be had in the cause, the plaintiff may be discharged from all liability in the premises. Upon filing his complaint the plaintiff obtained an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue, restraining the defendants (appellants here) from enforcing or attempting to enforce said decree of distribution. The defendants appeared and answered, and, as recited in the injunction order, "thereupon all of the parties being present and represented by counsel in open court, upon the records, files, and matters heretofore submitted to the court under and in connection with said orders, and upon the records, files, and minutes of said court, at this time, for good cause shown, and no sufficient cause to the contrary being shown, and it appearing that there has been a trial in this action of the issues of fact raised by the pleadings of all the parties in this action as to the right of the plaintiff to maintain this action, and it satisfactorily appearing to the court from the papers, records, and files in this action presented and considered in connection with and upon the hearing of said orders to show cause that it is a proper case for such injunction, and that sufficient grounds exist therefor," it was ordered that upon filing a suitable bond, as provided by law, and approved by the court, the defendants (appellants herein) be enjoined from undertaking in any way whatever to enforce said decree of distribution pending this action. From which order this appeal is taken.

The first point made by the appellants is that the plaintiff does not show the right of interpleader, because he did not bring the money into court, or offer to do so, at the time of instituting this proceeding. The provision of the Code in reference to interpleader, as the section originally stood, provided that a defendant "against whom an action is pending upon a contract, or for specific personal property, may, at any time before answer, upon affidavits that a party to the action makes against him, and, without any collusion with him, a demand upon such contract, or for such property, upon notice to such person and the adverse party, apply to the court for an order to substitute such person in his place, and discharge him from liability to either party, on his depositing in court the amount claimed on the contract, or delivering the property or its value to such person as the court may direct." Code Civ. Proc. § 386. By way of amendment, in 1881, the following material provision has been added to this section: "And whenever conflicting claims are, or may be, made upon a person for or relating to personal property, or the performance of an obligation, or any part thereof, such person may bring an action against the conflicting claimants to compel them to interplead and litigate their several claims among themselves. The order of substitution may be made and the action of interpleader may be maintained, and the applicant or plaintiff be discharged from liability to all or any of the conflicting claimants, although their titles or claims have not a common origin, or are not identical, but are adverse to and independent of one another." This added provision of the Code, it appears, authorizes such a proceeding as the one under consideration. And it would seem that this does not require, as a condition precedent to bringing said action, that the party should deposit or pay into the court the money or property in controversy. The record, however, shows that the court, in granting the injunction, ordered that the plaintiff deposit in court and pay to the clerk in that behalf the said amount in controversy.

It is further contended by the appellants that the order of distribution is final and conclusive, and estops plaintiff from maintaining this action. The plaintiff, however, it appears, does not dispute the claim of the appellants, but seeks protection from the demands and claim of the other defendants for the same money, and who are not bound by the decree. Under such circumstances, it would seem but just that the plaintiff, as executor, should not be compelled to defend said action, and subject himself perhaps to liability, not only to pay said money a second time, but also the costs of litigation. Besides, the plaintiff files his bill, not only as executor, but individually, whereas the decree of distribution runs against him, of course, only as executor.

The other points made by the appellants are not sufficiently important to require special notice or consideration under the facts disclosed by the record. We think the court below justified in granting the injunction as prayed, and the order is affirmed.

We concur HARRISON, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

MORAN et al. v. LENNON. (S. F. 1534.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1900.)

REPLEVIN—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Plaintiff purchased defendant's property at execution sale, which defendant refused to deliver, claiming that he furnished plaintiff the money to purchase the property for him. Plaintiff's testimony showed that she never had a conversation with defendant about purchasing the property, and that she obtained the money from her daughter, who borrowed it for the purpose, and that defendant held the property after the sale under a lease from plaintiff. Held, the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession.

Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county.

Action by Margaret Moran and another against John Lennon. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order overruling a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. S. Thompson, for appellant. E. F. Fitzpatrick, for respondents.

COOPER, C. This action was brought to recover the possession, or, in case a delivery cannot be had, the value of certain personal property, consisting of hotel furniture, dishes, bedding, etc., described in the complaint. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and findings filed, upon which judgment was ordered and entered for plaintiffs. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order.

It is not claimed that the judgment is not supported by the findings, and it is therefore not necessary to consider any question as to the appeal from the judgment. The court found that the plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of the property, and the principal point urged here is that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The evidence shows without conflict that prior to September 10, 1895, the defendant was the proprietor of the Villa Hotel, at Colma, in San Mateo county, and was the owner of the property in controversy, using the same in said hotel. The sheriff of the county, by virtue of an execution in his hands against the defendant, had levied upon the said property, and advertised that on said day, at 10 o'clock a. m., in front of said hotel, he would sell the same at public sale to the highest bidder to satisfy the said execution. Accordingly at said sale the plaintiff Margaret Moran being the highest bidder, the property was sold to her by the said sheriff for $425.25, which amount she paid, receiving the usual certificate of sale from the sheriff. No question is made as to the execution or the regularity of the sale. Neither is it claimed that the certificate of sale did not convey the legal title to said plaintiff Margaret Moran. Plaintiff James Moran is the husband of Margaret. It is claimed by defendant that he furnished the money with which the property was so purchased, and that the property was in fact purchased in trust for him, and at his instance and request. The plaintiff Margaret Moran testified that she did not get the money from defendant with which to purchase the property, and that she never had any conversation with him about purchasing it; that she got the money from her daughter, and with the money bought the property in her own name and for herself. The daughter of the plaintiffs testified that she borrowed the money for her mother from the Bank of San Mateo County, and gave the bank her note and mortgage for it. This evidence supports the finding of the court. In fact, in view of the testimony in the record and of the fact that the defendant held the property after it was so purchased by the plaintiff Margaret Moran under a written lease from her which he had never surrendered, we do not see how the court could have found any other way. There was no error in the refusal of the court to admit in evidence the agreement between defendant and his wife dated June 23, 1896. It was made long after the execution sale, and had no reference thereto. Neither did the subject-matter of the said contract in any way tend to show that defendant furnished the money to plaintiff Margaret with which to purchase the property. There is no other point in the record worthy of discussion. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1900.)

CRIMINAL LAW—ROBBERY—EVIDENCE—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where the prosecuting witness testified that he left a saloon in defendant's company, and that, soon after, the defendant seized and robbed him, while defendant testified that he remained in the saloon, which statement was corroborated by a woman who worked there, a verdict of guilty will not be set aside, the jury not being bound to decide in conformity with the testimony of the greater number of witnesses.

2. The evidence against the defendant being direct, it was not error to modify an instruction to the jury that they must consider the danger of convicting innocent persons by adding that they must also consider the danger to society of acquitting the guilty.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Oscar Stegenberg was convicted of robbery, and from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

H. N. Brandenstein, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

VAN DYKE, J. The defendant was informed against by the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco of the crime of robbery. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to a term of 20 years in the state prison. He appeals from the final judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. The first point of contention on the part of the appellant is that the verdict is against law by reason of the insufficiency of the evidence upon which the defendant was convicted. Johnson, the person robbed, testified that on February 21, 1898, he was, with several others, including the defendant, drinking in a saloon in the city and county of San Francisco, called the "City of Gottenberg"; that he (Johnson), the defendant, and a party unknown to him (Johnson), left the saloon together, and started for the bay shore, and while on the way the defendant threw his arm around the neck of the complaining witness, Johnson, at the same time holding his hand over his mouth, and with the other hand took from the pockets of the complaining witness $25. Johnson was positive not only as to the robbery, but as to the identity of the person who robbed him, to wit, the defendant. The defendant testified that he did not leave the saloon with Johnson, and did not commit the robbery, and he was corroborated on the point of not leaving the saloon with Johnson by a woman employed in the saloon. The jury are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, or against a presumption or other evidence, satisfying their minds. As said in People v. Vance, 21 Cal. 400: "We do not interfere with the province of the jury. There must be such overwhelming evidence against the verdict as to justify the inference that it was rendered under the influence of passion, or prejudice, or bias of some kind, to justify any interference on our part with the action of the jury." In People v. Williams, 59 Cal. 674, it is said: "It is a cardinal principle in the administration of criminal law that the province of weighing the evidence belongs exclusively to the jury; and if this court can find, from an inspection of the record, that there was in the whole evidence of the case enough to justify the conclusion arrived at by the jury, the judgment of the court below will not be disturbed." This doctrine has been announced so frequently, and in so many cases, that it is quite unnecessary to review them here.

2. The second contention of the appellant is that the court erred in modifying the fifth instruction requested by the defendant. The fifth instruction, as requested, reads as follows: "You are instructed that you must consider that innocent persons have been convicted, and you must further consider the danger of convicting an innocent person in weighing the testimony to determine whether there is a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt." The court gave the instruction as asked, and added: "That is true, gentlemen; but you are also instructed that you must consider that guilty persons have sometimes been acquitted, and you must consider the danger to society of acquitting a guilty person." The court proceeded further to state that the jury must decide the case upon the testimony, without being deterred from doing their duty according to law. It is, however, the quoted portions of the judge's comment upon the instruction that the appellant takes exception to, stating that it neutralizes or nullifies the effect of the instruction given. Neither the instruction asked nor the comment of the judge upon giving the same, which is complained of, constitutes a proposition of law. They simply state what is common knowledge, to wit, that in the history of jurisprudence it appears that innocent persons have sometimes been convicted; also that guilty persons have more frequently escaped conviction. In certain cases it might not be amiss to call the attention of the jury to the danger of convicting innocent persons by way of reminding them to examine and weigh the evidence with more caution, if possible, than in ordinary cases. People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 233, 26 Pac. 88, was a case of circumstantial evidence, as well as People v.

Cronin, 34 Cal. 191, referred to in that case. The court say in People v. Travers: "In the Cronin Case the court, in its instruction on this point, after stating the fact that counsel for defendant had, as in the case at bar, alluded to cases where, upon circumstantial evidence, innocent men had been convicted, told the jury, among other things, that 'the quotation of such cases is proper in order to make the jury careful in arriving at the proper conclusion from such [circumstantial] evidence.' But in the case at bar the court told the jury, 'You are not justified in considering such matters.'" This case is relied upon by appellant. There the court refused to allow the suggestion in the instruction that innocent men had been convicted, although the case depended upon circumstantial evidence. Here the testimony is direct, and is not circumstantial. Besides, the court gave the instruction with the qualification and comment already stated. The two cases, therefore, are altogether different. In the later case of People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049, 40 L. R. A. 269, the defendant asked the court to give the following instructions: "The jury are instructed that, if there is any one single fact proved to the satisfaction of the jury by a preponderance of evidence, which is inconsistent with the guilt of the defendant, it raises a reasonable doubt, and the jury should acquit the defendant." "You are instructed that it is the settled policy of the law that a person charged with a crime must be acquitted unless the evidence in the case establishes his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt; and it is better that a hundred guilty persons escape punishment than that one who is innocent be punished." The court refused both said instructions, and on appeal to this court, in its opinion in bank, says: "The meaning of the first of these instructions is involved in doubt, and the final clause of the second instruction is uncalled for;" and the court called attention to the fact that the whole doctrine of reasonable doubt had been fully and properly laid before the jury by the court in its instructions, adding, "The instructions, taken as a whole, are quite as favorable to the defendant as the facts and law will warrant," and affirmed the judgment.

3. It is further contended on the part of appellant that the court erred in modifying the fourth instruction requested by the defendant, which reads as follows: "You are instructed that a witness false in one part of testimony is to be distrusted in others. If, therefore, the prosecuting witness, John Johnson, is false in any part of his testimony, the other parts of his testimony are to be distrusted by you." The transcript does not show that this instruction was modified, but it contains remarks by way of explanation as to what is meant when it is said "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others." There is nothing in such remarks contrary to law or prejudicial to the defendant. The instructions given by the court were quite full, and the court repeated, in closing: "Now, you are not to convict the defendant of any offense unless you are satisfied that he is guilty of that offense,—satisfied of it to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt." The instructions, taken as a whole, are quite as favorable to the defendant as the facts and law warranted. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

EQUITY—DEMAND FOR JURY—SPECIFIC ISSUES.

Where defendant's answer raises issues of fact on which he is entitled to a jury, but the principal features of his defense are equitable, a demand for a jury must relate to the specific issues on which he is entitled to the same.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.
Appeal from superior court, Fresno county.

Proceedings by George E. Bates and E. O. Miller against Joseph Escot and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Escot appeals. Affirmed.

Lyman I. Mowry, for appellant. M. K. Harris, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, C. Foreclosure. Defendant Alferitz disclaimed any interest in the land. Defendant Escot, maker of the mortgage, answered and set up want of consideration for the mortgage debt, and also pleaded fraud and undue influence by plaintiffs in securing the execution of the notes and mortgage. The court gave judgment of foreclosure against Escot, from which, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he alone appeals. Escot alleged in his answer, and the court found, that on March 9, 1892, he and plaintiff entered into a contract by which plaintiffs, as agents of defendant, undertook to procure title from the state to certain 2,401.95 acres of land, situated in Merced county, for $4 per acre; and defendant paid at the time $1,000 on account of said purchase, and later $1,000 more. It is not claimed by defendant that there was anything unconscionable or fraudulent in this contract. The evidence tends to show that the contract of the parties was changed by substituting for it a deed of the land from plaintiffs to defendant, the transfer to him of the certificates of purchase, which had been taken in plaintiffs' names, and a mortgage back to plaintiffs for the unpaid balance, defendant assuming in the deed the payment of an unpaid balance of one dollar per acre to the state; that this change was made to accommodate defendant, and place in him the legal title, so that he could the better control the land and protect it from trespassers; that the amount to be paid was figured at $3 per acre, instead of $4, from which was deducted the $2,000 already paid, leaving due $5,205.85, for which the notes and mortgage were given, less 1 cent (the two notes being for $2,602.92 each, and defendant was to pay the other $1 per acre to the state); that the change in the agreement did not increase the price to be paid by defendant, but only changed the form of his obligations, and relieved the plaintiffs from further attention to payments of principal or interest to the state. In short, it was a natural and simple adjustment of the matter, and on its face bears no earmarks of overreaching or unconscionable advantage by plaintiffs; and the fact that the mortgage included lands other than those being secured from the state is in no wise inconsistent with perfectly fair dealing. Counsel devote much attention to the law governing principals and agents, and to the fiduciary relation of agents, which they claim arose under the original contract. We have carefully examined all the evidence, and are of the opinion that it amply supports the finding that defendant's allegations of fraud and undue influence were untrue. We do not, therefore, find it necessary to notice further this portion of defendant's brief.

Defendant demanded a jury to try the cause, which the court refused, and the ruling is assigned as error. The action was equitable in its character, and so were the principal features of the defense. Defendant was not entitled to a jury upon these issues. If there was an issue of fact presented by the answer which defendant was entitled to have tried by a jury, the demand should have been more specific. We see no error in refusing the demand made. Finding no error in the other assignments mentioned in defendant's brief, it is advised that the judgment and order be affirmed.

TAXATION—RECOVERY OF TAXES—LIMITATION—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CLASSES—REINCORPORATION—TAX LEVY—VALIDITY—QUIETING TITLE—VOID TAXES—PAYMENT.

1. An action to recover city taxes is barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, limiting actions to enforce a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, to three years.

2. Act 1883 requires that the assessment of city taxes in cities of the fourth class shall be made between January 1st and April 1st of each year, and that the levy shall be made on the first Monday in May of each year. Held, that where a city of the fifth class was reincorporated as a city of the fourth class on April 18, 1887, and made its assessment for that year between May 1st and August 1st, and its levy on October 16th as a city of the fifth class, such levy was void, and the taxes uncollectible.

3. An action to quiet title to land under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, authorizing an action against any person claiming an interest in land adverse to plaintiff to determine such adverse claim, is not the same as the equity suit to remove a cloud on title, and hence plaintiff was not required in such action, in which a city appeared and alleged a void tax levy as a lien on the land, to pay such taxes as a condition to relief on the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, San Diego county.

Action by Mary T. Dranga and others against Jane L. Rowe, the city of San Diego, and others, to quiet title to land. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant city appeals. Affirmed.

H. E. Doolittle, City Atty., and T. L. Lewis, Dep. City Atty., for appellant. Withington & Carter, for respondents Dranga and others.

VAN DYKE, J. This is an action to quiet title to certain lots in the city of San Diego. The defendants other than the city defaulted. In the amended answer of the city it is alleged that on April 18, 1887, the said city was reincorporated as a city of the fourth class, under the provisions of the act of 1883, providing for the incorporation and government of municipal corporations, and that prior to that date had been a city of the fifth class; that between the 1st day of May, 1887, and the 1st day of August of said year the assessor of said city made an assessment for the fiscal year 1887 on the property in said city, including the lots in suit, and the same were assessed to one George M. Wetherly, who was then the owner thereof, and was such owner during the whole of said year; that on the 18th of October, 1887, the board of equalization of said city equalized said assessment made by the assessor aforesaid, and that the board of trustees of said city thereupon, on said date, fixed the rate and levied the taxes in said city for municipal purposes for said fiscal year, and that said taxes so levied on the said lots, including improvements, amounted to the sum of $165.99, which taxes, together with interest and penalties, it is alleged, have not been paid, or any part thereof; and it is asked in said answer that no decree be rendered quieting the title of plaintiffs to said property except on condition that all said city taxes assessed against said property for the year 1887 be paid. Demurrer was interposed to said amended answer on the grounds: First, that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to plaintiffs' cause of action; and, secondly, that the defense is barred by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (referring to sections 336, 338-340, 343). The court sustained the demurrer, and, said defendant having elected to stand upon said amended answer, the

In City of San Diego v. Higgins, 115 Cal. 170, 46 Pac. 923, it is held that an action to recover municipal taxes or enforce the lien thereof is subject to the limitations respecting an action upon a liability created by statute, and is barred in three years after the right of action accrues. It is stated in the respondents' brief, although it does not appear in the record, that the case referred to involved, among other property, that claimed by the plaintiffs in this action, which then belonged to said Higgins. However that may be, it seems clear that under the rule laid down in said case the taxes in question, if valid when levied, could not now be enforced by said city. The act of 1883, in reference to municipal corporations, requires that as to the fourth class the assessment shall be made between January 1st and April 1st in each year, whereas the answer shows that the assessment was made between May 1 and August 1, 1887. The law also requires, as to cities of the fourth class, that the levy shall be made on the first Monday in May of each year, whereas the answer shows that it was made on October 16, 1887; in other words, it appears that the assessment, equalization, and levy were all made under the law pertaining to cities of the fifth class, instead of cities of the fourth class. To be valid, the assessment and levy must be made strictly as provided by law. "All proceedings in the nature of assessing property for the purpose of taxation, and in levying and collecting taxes thereof, are in invitum, and must be stricti juris." Weyse v. Crawford, 85 Cal. 196, 24 Pac. 735. "A tax is a charge upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes. It is not founded upon contract. It does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor between the taxpayer and state. * * * It owes its existence to the action of the legislative power, and does not depend for its validity or enforcement upon the individual assent of the taxpayer." Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 318. The record in this case shows that the assessment and levy made by the city of San Diego for the year 1887 were not made as directed by law, and hence such assessment and levy are invalid and void.

It is claimed on behalf of appellants that this action is in the nature of a bill in equity, and it is therefore claimed that, although no action will lie to recover the taxes on plaintiff's property for the year 1887, still there is a moral obligation resting upon the plaintiff to pay such taxes, and that upon the maxim that "he who seeks equity must do equity" the plaintiff should pay such taxes before a court of equity will grant relief. The cases cited by appellant are generally in the line of proceedings in equity to restrain the sale of illegal taxes or to cancel a void tax deed. In such case no relief is necessary, for the reason that the proceedings complained of would not amount to a cloud upon the title.

An action under the Code, as this is, is something more than the old proceeding in chancery to remove a cloud or to quiet title, although such action is frequently, and perhaps commonly, referred to as an action to quiet title. The Code declares: "An action may be brought by any person against another, who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim." Code Civ. Proc. § 738. The action may be brought by one out of possession as well as in possession, and in the former case the action would be in the nature of an action at law in ejectment; and hence (by an amendment to the same section) it is provided that a party has "the right to a jury trial in any case where, by the law, such right is now given." In such action the plaintiff is entitled to judgment although the defendant make a disclaimer, but without costs; the same as in case of default. It would be strange, indeed, if the plaintiff were entitled to judgment on a disclaimer, and not entitled to judgment where the answer shows no legal defense. In Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 564, 25 Pac. 58, the court say: "It is contended that the complaint does not warrant any relief, because it shows that the adverse claims of defendants rest upon proceedings which are void upon their face. But this objection is not available in an action to determine an adverse claim, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such an action may be maintained against a person who claims under a void tax deed. Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 234; Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365; Pearson v. Creed, 78 Cal. 144, 20 Pac. 302; Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 1134." The judgment is affirmed.

GIRVIN et al. v. SIMON. (Sac. 574.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — STREET ASSESSMENTS — OBJECTIONS — APPEAL — EFFECT — REMONSTRANCE.

1. Act 1885, § 3, as amended by St. 1889, p. 153, authorizes lot owners liable to assessment for city work, who feel aggrieved or have objections to the performance of the work, to file "a petition of remonstrance" with the city clerk, specifying their objections, before the issuance of the assessment roll; and St. 1885, p. 156, § 11, provides that owners claiming city work has not been properly performed, etc., shall, within 30 days after the date of the warrant, appeal to the city council, by briefly stating their objections in writing, etc. Held, that a communication filed with the city clerk, after a street assessment had been levied, stating that the signer "remonstrated" against the acceptance of the contract, and setting out his objections to the work, was a sufficient appeal to require the council to act thereon as such, though it was styled a "remonstrance" only.

2. St. 1885, p. 156, § 11, provides that owners liable to assessment for city work, claiming it has not been properly performed, may appeal to the city council, and, on such appeal being taken, requires the city to publish notice thereof, and of the time and place of hearing, and declares that all decisions of the city council on such notice and hearing shall be final and conclusive on all persons entitled to appeal, and as to all informalities which might have been avoided. Held, that where a city council failed to entertain an appeal properly taken by one property owner, urging fatal objections to an entire improvement, no assessment for such improvement against other owners could be collected while such appeal remained undetermined.

3. St. 1885, p. 156, § 11, authorizes property owners objecting to city work to file an appeal with the city council, and, on such filing, requires the city to publish notice thereof, and of the time and place of hearing. Held, that on the filing of such appeal it was the imperative duty of the city council to set a time for hearing, and publish notice thereof, without any request for such action from appellant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1.

Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by one Girvin and others against J. Simon. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James A. Louttit, for appellants. Budd & Thompson and Dudley & Buck, for respondent.

HAYNES, C. Action to foreclose an assessment for street improvements in the city of Stockton. The defendant had judgment, and plaintiffs appeal therefrom on the judgment roll, and their contention is that the conclusions of law are not correctly drawn from the findings of fact.

Among other persons affected by said improvements and assessment was one H. M. Fanning, who was the owner of certain premises which were assessed, but said Fanning had no interest in the lot involved in this case. The court also found "that the defendant, J. Simon, and other holders of property affected by said work and assessment, requested said Fanning to see that an appeal was put in to the city council"; that, within 30 days after the warrant mentioned in the complaint was issued, said Fanning delivered to and filed with the city clerk his written objections to said work, of which, and the indorsements thereon, the following is a copy: "Stockton, January 10, 1893. To the City Council of the City of Stockton—Gentlemen: The undersigned hereby respectfully remonstrate against the acceptance of contract for the paving of Channel street between Hunter and California streets, as I claim said contract has not been done according to specifications on file in the office of the street superintendent. My claim includes all curbing, bituminous rock paving, basalt-block paving, concrete work, filling under sidewalks, and relaying of the same. Respectfully, yours, H. M. Fanning. [Indorsed] Filed January 10, 1893. January 23, 1893, referred back to Mr. Fanning; the city attorney deciding it to be only a remonstrance, and not an appeal." The court further found that no notice has ever been given by the city council of the hearing of said objections; that the city council has not heard the same, or passed on the merits thereof, or confirmed said assessment; and that Fanning has not made any further application in the matter. On these facts, two questions arise: (1) Were the said written objections filed by Fanning sufficient in form and substance to constitute an appeal from the assessment? (2) If sufficient as an appeal, the city council not having given any notice of a hearing, and not having heard said appeal, is it available as a defense by other property owners whose property is separately sought to be charged for the same improvements, made under the same contract, and embraced in the same assessment?

1. Were the objections filed by Fanning sufficient as an appeal? Appellants refer us to section 3 of the act of 1885, as amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 158), which provides that, at any time before the issuance of the assessment roll, owners of lots liable to assessments who may feel aggrieved, or who may have objections to any of the subsequent proceedings of the council in relation to the performance of the work, "shall file with the clerk a petition of remonstrance," specifying in what respect they feel aggrieved; and their argument seems to be that the written objections filed by Fanning, and in which he uses the word "remonstrate," was "a petition of remonstrance" under that section, and not "an appeal," under section 11 of the act of 1885 (St. 1885, p. 156), which was then in force, and which provides as follows: "The owners, whether named in the assessment or not, the contractor, or his assigns, and all other persons directly interested in any work provided for in this act, or in the assessment, feeling aggrieved by any act or determination of the superintendent of streets in relation thereto, or who claim that the work has not been performed according to the contract in a good and substantial manner, or having or making any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment or other act, determination or proceedings of the superintendent of streets, shall, within thirty days after the date of the warrant, appeal to the city council, by briefly stating their objections in writing and filing the same with the clerk of said council. Notice of the time and place of hearing, briefly referring to the work contracted to be done, or other subject of appeal, and to the acts, determinations or proceedings objected to or complained of, shall be published for five days." The distinction between a remonstrance and an appeal is clear. The former is made to the acts or proceedings of the council, and is made before the assessment. The latter is made after the assessment, and relates to the acts of the superintendent of streets in accepting work not done as required by the contract, or other acts of his specified in the statute. We think the objections filed by Fanning good as an appeal to the city council, both in form and substance. Though the word "remonstrate" was used, it was not so far inappropriate as to be misleading. Its first definition, as given by Webster, is "to present and urge reasons in opposition to an act, measure, or any course of proceeding." Besides, the body of the paper distinctly pointed his objections to the acts of the superintendent of streets in accepting work not done according to the specifications of the contract. No one could be misled as to the intention with which the paper was filed. While it is always desirable to use the proper technical or statutory designation of a paper or proceeding, the law will determine its sufficiency from its substance and evident purpose. That Fanning's appeal was sufficient in form and substance, see Barber v. Board, 42 Cal. 630, and Belser v. Hoffschneider, 104 Cal. 455, 38 Pac. 312.

2. Did the failure of the city council to entertain the appeal of Mr. Fanning, and to give notice of the hearing of it as required by the statute, operate to stay proceedings against others to collect assessments for the same improvements made under the same contract, and included in the same assessment roll? We think it did so operate. The objection did not go to some error in the assessment of Mr. Fanning's separate property, and which affected no one else, but the objection went to the whole work. If these objections had been heard and sustained, it is clear that the contractors could not recover against any of the parties assessed. If only the party appealing and the contractor were affected, it would be quite sufficient to give to each personal notice of the time of hearing; but the statute requires notice of the time and place of hearing, and the subject of appeal, to be published for five days, and the statute specially provides that "all the decisions of said city council, upon notice and hearing as aforesaid, shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of this section, as to all errors, informalities and irregularities which said city council might have remedied and avoided." The court found that the defendant and other property owners affected by said work requested said Fanning to see that an appeal was made, and if the appeal had been entertained, and notice given, each could have been heard, and each would have been concluded by the result, whether they appeared and were heard or not. Thus, it is clear that the appeal, when filed, though by one only, suspends all proceedings to collect any of the assessments until that appeal has been heard, after the statutory notice has been given, and it is only such hearing upon notice that binds any of the parties assessed. They were not bound by the action of the council in deciding, without notice or a hearing, that the appeal was insufficient. But it is urged that it was the duty of Fanning to request action by the council. It is not so written. He had done all that was required. The statutory direction to the city council was imperative, and the appellant, and all other parties assessed might safely rest until due notice was given. In People v. O'Neil, 51 Cal. 91, the appeal to the board of supervisors was taken regularly and in proper time. The court said: "The board had no power to dismiss this appeal, and it must be regarded as still pending. It results that the assessment has not become a finality, and the action was prematurely instituted." In Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 569, cited by appellant, the court pointed out the distinction between that case and People v. O'Neil, and approved the latter case. The judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

APPEAL—JUDGMENT—NEW TRIAL—SALES—RESERVATION OF TITLE—TAXATION—ASSESSMENT—NAME OF OWNER—REAL PROPERTY.

1. An appeal may be taken from an order denying a motion for new trial, when made within proper time after the denial, though the time limited for appeal from the final judgment has expired.

2. On appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the court will consider the sufficiency of the evidence, and the errors of law, if any, occurring during trial.

3. Plaintiff delivered a harvester to R. under contract that it did not part with title until notes given therefor were fully paid, and in case of default it was, if it wished, to take possession of the harvester, and all payments thereon were to be retained as compensation for its use prior to the default. After default in payment, R. sold the harvester to defendant for a valuable consideration. Held, that R. having no title, but only a right to secure title, could convey none to defendant, and that plaintiff was the owner, and entitled to possession.

4. Plaintiff delivered a harvester to R., retaining title until payment made. The tax thereon, together with the tax on several other items of personal property belonging to R. alone, was assessed to "R. and wife and H." (the plaintiff), and the harvester was sold to defendant for delinquent taxes. Held that, under Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3636, providing that the assessor shall ascertain the name of the owner, and assess the property to him, and, if unable to ascertain the name, shall assess it to the "unknown owner," the assessment was invalid.

5. A sale of the personal property of H. for taxes due, not by him alone, nor upon the property alone, but for taxes on property not owned by H., and given to the assessor as the property of R., is void, under Pol. Code, §§ 3820, 3821, providing for a collection of the personal property tax by seizure and sale of any personalty owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed.

6. Pol. Code, § 3628, providing that a mistake in the name of the owner of real property shall not invalidate the assessment for taxes, has no application to an assessment of personal property, and hence an assessment of H.'s personal property to "R. and wife and H." cannot be held valid thereunder.

Action by Houser & Haines Manufacturing Company against R. L. Hargrove. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and from an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

Louttit & Middlecoff, for appellant. R. L. Hargrove, in pro. per.

COOPER, C. Judgment was entered in the court below in favor of defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The judgment was entered on the 12th day of August, 1897, and the notice of appeal therefrom served August 2, 1899; therefore this court will not entertain the appeal from the judgment. The order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was made and entered June 6, 1899, and notice of appeal from this order served August 2, 1899. The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial was taken within 60 days after the order, and it makes no difference that the time for appealing from the judgment has elapsed. The motion for a new trial, under our Code and practice, is a proceeding independent of the judgment, and the motion may be granted, even after the judgment has been affirmed on appeal. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 327, 27 Pac. 186. Upon an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, we may consider whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings, and errors of law, if any, occurring during the trial. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 329, 27 Pac. 186; Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 243, 41 Pac. 299.

The complaint alleges that on the 6th day of June, 1896, the plaintiff was, and ever since has been, the owner and entitled to the possession of "One Haines-Houser Improved Combined Harvester," of the value of $1,000; that the defendant on said date wrongfully took the said property into his possession, and ever since has unlawfully withheld and detained the same. Judgment is asked for the recovery of the possession of the said harvester, or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had. The answer denied that plaintiff ever was the owner or entitled to the possession of the harvester, and alleged that the defendant was, on the 2d day of June, 1896, "ever since has been, and now is, the owner and entitled to the possession of said property." The case was tried before the court without a jury, and findings filed. The court found that the plaintiff was not, at the time of the commencement of the action, the owner, or entitled to the possession, of the harvester; and further found that the defendant was, at the time the action was commenced, and still is, the owner and entitled to the possession thereof; that the value thereof was $1,000; and that defendant is entitled to judgment. The findings are quite voluminous, and cover some 67 folios of the transcript. The greater part of them consists of probative facts, recitals of evidence, and copies of documents that properly should have no place therein. The main and material findings are those herein stated as to ownership of the property, and we do not think the evidence set forth in other parts of the findings, or in the record, supports them. There is little, if any, conflict as to the facts, and we must determine from them as to whether the plaintiff or defendant was the owner of the harvester at the time the action was commenced. On June 10, 1893, one Rowe gave an order in writing to Houser, Haines & Knight for the harvester, for which he was to pay $1,400, according to the terms of certain notes to be executed by him. This order contained the following clause: "If upon one week's trial the machine should not work well, the purchaser shall give immediate notice to said Houser, Haines & Knight, or their agent, and allow time to send a person to put it in order. If it cannot then be made to work to the entire satisfaction of the purchaser, he shall return it at once to the agent of whom he received it, and his payment, if any has been made, will be refunded." The harvester was, in pursuance of the said written order, delivered to Rowe, and, after being tried and tested, on the 4th day of August, 1893, an agreement of sale was entered into and signed by said Rowe and the Houser & Haines Manufacturing Company, a corporation, under the terms of which the said corporation agreed to sell to said Rowe the said harvester for $1,400, the same to be paid for in three notes to Houser, Haines & Knight,—one for $500, due September 1, 1893; one for $500, due September 1, 1894; and one for $400, due September 1, 1895. This agreement contained the following clause: "And it is agreed that said Houser, Haines & Knight do not part with the title to said harvester until all said deferred payments or notes are fully paid; that time is of the essence of the agreement; that, should the undersigned make default in any of said payments, then said Houser, Haines & Knight shall, at their option, and without notice, terminate this agreement, and with or without legal process take and retain said harvester, wherever it may be situated, and all moneys paid by the undersigned prior to such default shall be compensation for the privilege of using said harvester prior to such default." The promissory notes were executed by Rowe according to the agreement, and delivered to said Houser, Haines & Knight. The said Rowe paid the sum of $750 upon account of said notes and the purchase price of said harvester, and no more, and the balance of the $1,400, with interest, according to the terms of said notes, remains due and unpaid. During the year 1894, the said Houser, Haines & Knight sold and assigned the said contract and the said notes to plaintiff. The contract was a conditional sale, and the title was not divested as long as the notes remained unpaid. This principle of law was decided in the early case of Kohler v. Hayes, 41 Cal. 455, and has since been followed in many cases. Hegler v. Eddy, 53 Cal. 597; Rodgers v. Bachman, 109 Cal. 556, 42 Pac. 448; Perkins v. Mettler (Sept. 15, 1899) 58 Pac. 384. It is the rule followed in the United States supreme court. Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 7 Sup. Ct. 51, 30 L. Ed. 285.

It follows that plaintiff was the owner of the property at the time of the commencement of the action, unless it had in some manner been divested of the title. Defendant claims title by virtue of a bill of sale for a valuable consideration made to him by said Rowe on June 2, 1896. Rowe had no title at the time he made the bill of sale, but only the right to procure the title upon paying the balance of the purchase price. He conveyed that right to defendant, but neither Rowe nor defendant has paid the balance of the purchase price which Rowe agreed to pay. Hence the transfer by Rowe to defendant did not clothe him with the legal title. On June 6, 1896, the plaintiff served a notice in writing upon said Rowe, notifying him of his default in the payment of the balance of the note for the purchase price of the harvester, and of its election to terminate the contract and take possession thereof. The said written notice also tendered said Rowe the unpaid notes. Defendant further claims by virtue of having paid the assessor of Madera county $28 for said property at a public sale for delinquent taxes made June 2, 1896. The title through this source depends upon the validity of the assessment and proceedings leading up to the sale. It appears, from page 44 of the assessment roll of Madera county for the year 1896, that under the heading "Taxpayers' Name" is the following: "Rowe, I. M., et ux., and Houser and Haines Mfg. Co., and Houser, Haines & Knight;" and under the head of "Description of Property" is the following: "Furniture, $15; sewing machine, $5; farm utensils, $50; machinery (harvester), $350; wagon, $20; harness, $5; 10 horses, $20; 5 colts, $50; 1 cow, $20; 1 dozen poultry, $3; 3 hogs, $8." On the same page the total valuation of all of the above property so assessed to the parties therein stated is given as $726." At the bottom of the page, under the head of "Remarks," is the following: "Harvester seized for taxes and sold to R. L. Hargrove, June 2, 1896, for twenty-eight dollars, including road and poll tax." No part of the property so entered upon said assessment roll going to make up the valuation of $726, other than the harvester, belonged to plaintiff. It was all given in to the assessor by I. M. Rowe in a sworn statement made by him April 9, 1896. After the list was so given in, the assessor, of his own volition, inserted the names, "I. M. Rowe et ux., Houser and Haines Mfg. Co., and Houser, Haines & Knight," instead of the words, "I. M. Rowe et al."

The tax due upon all the said property so assessed was $16.70, to which was added $2 for road tax and $2 for poll tax, making $20.70.

To this was added $7 costs of advertising and sale, but the assessor sold for $28, in round figures. The tax rate for said county for the year 1896 was $2.30 per hundred, and the taxes due upon the harvester at this rate, and according to its assessed valuation, was $8.05. The assessment was void, and the sale thereunder conveyed no title. Personal property must be assessed to the owner or the person claiming it, or in whose possession or control it was, at 12 o'clock m. on the first Monday of March next preceding the assessment. Pol. Code, § 3628. Without a valid assessment, all subsequent proceedings are nullities, and in making the assessment the provisions of the statute under which it is to be made must be observed with particularity. An assessment of personal property to a named person other than the owner is absolutely void. Kelsey v. Abbott, 13 Cal. 609; Smith v. Davis, 30 Cal. 537; Blatner v. Davis, 32 Cal. 328; People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 591; Crawford v. Schmidt, Id. 618; Lake Co. v. Sulphur Bank Quicksilver Min. Co., 66 Cal. 21, 4 Pac. 965; City of San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 503, 25 Pac. 694. In certain cases where taxes on personal property are not, in the opinion of the tax collector, a lien upon real property sufficient to secure the same, the tax collector may collect them "by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed." Pol. Code, §§ 3820, 3821. In this case the personal property sold was owned by plaintiff. The taxes upon the property, with the taxes upon several other items of property, were assessed against "Rowe, I. M., et ux., and Houser and Haines Mfg. Co., and Houser, Haines & Knight." The property was not sold for taxes due upon it alone, nor for taxes due by plaintiff alone, but it was sold for taxes due upon property not owned or claimed by plaintiff, and given in to the assessor as the property of Rowe. It was also sold for $2 road tax and $2 poll tax. The corporation plaintiff certainly did not owe a poll tax. The duty of the assessor is to ascertain the name of the owner of property, and assess it to him, and, if the name of the owner is unknown to the assessor, and not of record, to assess it to "unknown owners." Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3636. And, if it is not so assessed, the assessment is void. Grotefend v. Ultz, 53 Cal. 666; Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 659, 54 Pac. 254.

It is urged that the rule heretofore existing in this state has been changed by section 3628 of the Political Code, and that a mistake in the name of the owner will not invalidate an assessment. The section, so far as claimed to be in point here, is: "But no mistake in the name of the owner or supposed owner of real property shall render the assessment thereof invalid." Nothing is said about a mistake as to personal property, and the section has no application in such case. Lake Co. v. Sulphur Bank Quicksilver Min. Co., 66 Cal. 21, 4 Pac. 965; City of San Luis Obispo

v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 502, 25 Pac. 694. Under this appeal, we have no power to order judgment for plaintiff on the findings, if they were such as to authorize such judgment. The order should be reversed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; CHIPMAN, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order is reversed.

In re KASSON'S ESTATE.

LINDY v. McCHESNEY et al. (Sac. 700.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1900.)

HEIRSHIP — ESTABLISHMENT — WITNESSES — CROSS-EXAMINATION—IMPEACHMENT — PARTICULAR ACTS OF IMMORALITY—STATEMENT.

1. In a proceeding by plaintiff claiming to be the sole heir of a testator against devisees under the will to determine his heirship, M. filed an answer denying plaintiff's heirship, and alleging that she was the testator's sole heir, and both plaintiff and M. claimed to be the only issue of a certain marriage between testator and H. On the trial devisees produced a witness who testified that she was the woman claimed by plaintiff and M. to have married testator, and that she had no issue of the marriage. She was also a hostile witness to both plaintiff and M. Held, that it was prejudicial error to refuse to allow M. to cross-examine such witness at length concerning her alleged marriage with testator, etc., though plaintiff had cross-examined her on such matters, since in such proceedings, authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1664, each person who appears, either by complaint or answer, and claims heirship, is an independent party to the action.

2. It was error to allow a witness to be asked over objection, on cross-examination, if the house she was keeping in a certain place was not a house of prostitution.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Joaquin county.

Action by George W. Lindy against Martha E. McChesney and others to establish plaintiff's rights as an heir of George M. Kasson, deceased, in which Mary E. Mann filed an answer claiming heirship of such decedent. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, Mary E. Mann appeals. Reversed.

Woods & Levinsky, for appellant, Mann. Denson, Oatman & Denson and L. S. Church, for respondent Lindy. John A. Percy, Nicoll & Orr, Budd & Thompson, and Gould & Bogue, for respondent defendant. Cowdray, Loutitt & Middlecoff and H. R. McNoble, for respondents McChesney and others.

McFARLAND, J. The deceased, George M. Kasson, died testate at Stockton, Cal., in September, 1895. By his will he left all of his property to certain persons, most of whom were his nieces and nephews, and who may be designated here for convenience as "Martha E. McChesney and others," and are the respondents in this appeal. The will was admitted to probate during the year

1895, and letters testamentary were issued to Clark McChesney, who was named in the will as an executor, and duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such executor. Within the statutory time George W. Lindy filed his petition, and afterwards a complaint, under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the rights of all persons to the estate of Kasson and all interests therein ascertained and declared. He averred in his complaint that he was the legitimate son and the only child and heir of the said George M. Kasson, and that as no provision is made for him in the will, and as it does not appear that the omission to provide for him in the will was intentional, therefore he is entitled to the whole estate. Martha E. McChesney and others filed answers in which they denied that plaintiff was the son of the testator, and claimed that they, as legatees and devisees, were entitled to have the estate distributed to them. Mary E. Mann filed an answer on her own behalf in which she denied that the plaintiff was the son of the testator, and set up that she was the daughter and only child of said George M. Kasson, and that as no provision was made for her in the will, and as it did not appear that the omission to provide for her was intentional, therefore she was entitled, as the only heir, to have the entire estate distributed to her. After a hearing, the court rendered judgment in which it was declared and decreed that neither the plaintiff, Lindy, nor the claimant, Mary E. Mann, was a child or heir of the said Kasson, deceased, and that neither of them was entitled to any part of the estate, and that Martha E. McChesney and others were entitled to have the estate distributed to them as legatees and devisees under the will. From this judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the claimant, Mary E. Mann, appeals. No appeal has been taken by the plaintiff, George W. Lindy.

Appellant contends that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the findings of the court; but as, in our opinion, the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed for errors of law hereinafter noticed, it is not necessary for us to pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence, although it may be said that it was quite contradictory and conflicting. Appellant contends that the court committed a great many errors in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence; the main points, under this head, being that the court erred in sustaining objections to questions asked by appellant's counsel in cross-examination of witnesses of the respondents. These points are presented by something over 100 exceptions. We cannot be expected to notice each, or any considerable number, of these exceptions. We will pass upon them, mainly, as a whole, specifying a few of them for the purpose of showing the general character of the exceptions; and, in order to do this, it is necessary to notice briefly the nature of the claims made by the different parties, and the general character of the evidence introduced.

The plaintiff, Lindy, claimed that the deceased, George M. Kasson, was married to one Mary Hayden, in St. Louis, Mo., on the 28th day of February, 1845, and introduced a certificate of marriage by a justice of the peace given on that date, and certifying that he had married George M. Kasson and Mary Hayden, and claimed that plaintiff was the son and only child of said parties, and was born on the 30th day of April, 1847. The appellant, Mary E. Mann, denies that said certificate of the justice of the peace was of the marriage of the parents of plaintiff, Lindy, but claims that it was a certificate of the marriage of her parents, and that she is the daughter and only child of said George M. Kasson and Mary Hayden, and that she was born at said city of St. Louis on the 15th day of March, 1849. She claims that her father, the said Kasson, deceased, removed from St. Louis to the state of California in about the year 1850, and that a few years afterwards, when she was 6 or 7 years old, she removed with her mother to the state of Arkansas; that she, appellant, went to live with a family named Flint, on a ranch near a little town called Loanoke, and lived there about 12 years; that in 1869 the Flints moved to Hot Springs, Ark., and she went with them, and that her mother, whom she calls Mary Kasson, was then living at Hot Springs at a hotel called the "Earle House," and frequently visited her at the home of the Flints; that about three or four months afterwards she (appellant) left Hot Springs; that she returned to Hot Springs in a few months, and lived there until about 1872, but that when she returned to Hot Springs her mother had left, and that she had not seen her since, and supposed she was dead. The respondents, Martha E. McChesney and others, contend that the claims of the plaintiff and the appellant are both unfounded; that the woman who was married to Kasson in 1845 was not the woman who went to Hot Springs, and whom appellant claims to have been her mother; that the woman who actually married Kasson was a Mrs. Mary Hayden, whose maiden name was Mary Ann Mize; that she lived with Kasson until some time in the year 1850, when he went to California, and that he returned to St. Louis, and lived with her awhile as husband and wife, in 1852; that she is not the mother of either plaintiff or appellant, and never had any child by the said Kasson; that she lived in St. Louis until 1876, and then came to California; that she was divorced from Kasson, and was afterwards married to one Stansbury; that after his death, and after coming to California, she was married to a man by the name of Molloy; that she is still living, and that her present name is Mary Ann Molloy. Respondents claim that they produced this identical woman at the trial, and they did produce a woman calling herself Mary Ann Molloy, who testified, among other things, that she was the woman who was married to Kasson in 1845, in St. Louis, and that the facts as to her life and history alleged in the contention of respondents, as above stated, are true.

Many of the exceptions upon which the appellant relies were to rulings of the court sustaining objections to questions asked by her of the witness Molloy on cross-examination, and we think that many of these rulings were prejudicially erroneous. The testimony of this witness, whether true or not, was certainly in many respects quite remarkable, and presented an instance where a wide range of cross-examination should have been allowed. She testified to material matters occurring during a period of from 50 to 60 years, and a liberal latitude should have been given appellant, on cross-examination, to test her intelligence, knowledge, accuracy of memory, disposition to tell the truth, bias, relation to the parties, interest, motive, etc. In such a case, a refusal to allow a reasonable cross-examination is a ground of reversal. Neal v. Neal, 58 Cal. 287; Sternburg v. Meany, 53 Cal. 425; Wixom v. Goodcell, 90 Cal. 622, 27 Pac. 419. See, also, McFadden v. Railway Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681; People v. Benson, 52 Cal. 380; Sharp v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 404, 21 Pac. 846; People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 Pac. 80; Greenl. Ev. § 446. The importance of the testimony of this witness is accentuated by the fact that the court expressly found, in accordance with her statements, that she is the woman who intermarried with Kasson at St. Louis on the 28th day of February, 1845; that she continued to be his wife "until about the year 1862"; and that "no child or children were ever born to said George M. Kasson and Mary A. Kasson"; and from this finding all the other findings necessarily follow.

In order to understand the pertinency of questions which were not allowed to be asked the witness Molloy on cross-examination by appellant, it is necessary to state briefly some of her testimony in chief and on cross-examination by plaintiff. She testified, among other things, that she was born in Illinois in December, 1824, and moved to St. Louis in 1843; that she married Hayden, her first husband, when she was about 14 years old, but could not remember the month or the year of her marriage to him, and that she heard—but did not know—that he got a divorce from her; that she married Kasson, as before stated, in 1845, and that after he went to California she received many letters from him, and that she thought she got a divorce from him, but did not know the year of the divorce, or how long it was after he went to California, but that it was obtained in St. Louis, and that she never bore either a son or a daughter to Kasson; that in 1863 she was married to Stansbury, who afterwards died, although she did not remember the year of his death, but thought it was about 2½ years after the marriage; that in 1876 she moved to California, and lived between Los Angeles and Santa Monica, and afterwards in Los Angeles; and that in 1877 she was married in Los Angeles to Charles Pinckney Molloy, and lived with him about two years, when he died. The marriage license and certificate of marriage were introduced, showing that the witness was married to Molloy on January 3, 1877, from which it appeared that she was a native of Kentucky, aged 40 years. She testified that this marriage record was correct. She further testified that in 1847 she had a child living with her at St. Louis named Fannie Patterson, who stayed with her until she was about 10 years old; that a day or two before she left St. Louis for California she got from an orphan asylum a child 2 or 3 days old, whom she wanted for a companion, and brought her to California; that she went by the name of Althea May, and afterwards married James Simmons, of Los Angeles; that during her whole life she had never been without children, not her own, living with her; that after she went to Los Angeles she wrote a letter to Kasson, addressing it to him at Stockton, and received a reply; that when Kasson returned to California, in 1852, he did not want her to go with him, but told her that when two families named West and Dibble, whom she knew, should go to California, he would be glad to have her go with them, but that when these families went she did not go with them. She further testified that in May, 1897, she went from Los Angeles to Oakland, Cal., and had since lived there in a house on Seventh avenue, and that on July 4, 1897, she was joined there by a man named Wilson and his stepdaughter, Miss Milliken, and a niece of the witness Mrs. Goldman, all of whom came at that time from the East for the purpose of being witnesses for respondents, and who remained with her in that house until the trial of this cause commenced, which was not until March, 1898, and testified at the trial, and that she left Los Angeles for Oakland a few days after Clark McChesney, one of the respondents, had first visited her at Los Angeles. She also testified that she bore one child to Hayden, which was the only child she ever bore.

The foregoing summary of parts of her testimony is sufficient for an understanding of the exceptions to rulings made on her cross-examination. It would require too much space to state here all the questions asked of the witness Molloy by appellant to which objections were sustained; it will be sufficient to state enough of them to show the general nature of the rulings made on cross-examination. She was asked, among other questions, the following: "Question.

How long had you known James Hayden before you were married to him?" "Q. Under what circumstances did you meet Mr. Hayden?" "Q. How old were you when you married James Hayden?" "Q. How long did you live with James Hayden as his wife?" "Q. In what court, and in what city and county and state, and when, did you obtain the decree of divorce, if any, from James Hayden?" "Q. Did you and the man you say was your husband, Mr. Kasson, ever board in the house of Mrs. Milliken?" "Q. What year was the last letter written by Mr. Kasson that you received from him while he was in California and you were in St. Louis?" "Q. Tell me the name of the court and the place where it was located and the time when you obtained the divorce from Mr. Kasson." "Q. Is it not true, then, that you were desirous of coming to California, and your husband would not allow you to?" "Q. When did you first ascertain that a letter addressed to him at Stockton would reach him?" "Q. Do you remember how you signed the letter you say was sent to Mr. Kasson from Los Angeles?" "Q. State, if you know, whether Mr. Stansbury was in the habit of or did communicate with your husband, George W. Kasson, while he was living in California." "Q. When and where did you first meet Mr. Charles Molloy?" "Q. How long had you known Mr. Molloy before you married him?" "Q. Was he engaged in the same business prior to your marriage that he was at the time of his death?" "Q. How long had you known Mr. Stansbury before you married him?" "Q. Do you notice a discrepancy there (referring to the certificate of her marriage with Molloy) of fourteen years in your age?" "Q. Could you tell me whether it was the early, middle, or latter part of year 1875 when you got this little girl?" "Q. What means had you, who had never had but one child, and that when you were about sixteen years of age, of giving this little infant nourishment?" "Q. Was the institution from which you took this child conducted by sisters of mercy or charity, or was it a public institution?" "Q. Was it an institution of a public or private nature?" "Q. Was this little girl ever christened while in your charge?" "Q. Why did she attend the public schools under the name of Molloy, and marry under the name of Stansbury?" "Q. Please describe this girl who you say was not your daughter and who married Mr. Simmons." "Q. How old was this girl when she married Mr. Simmons?" "Q. You say you have always been in the habit of having babies or children with you?" "Q. What was the cause of habit on your part of having babies or children at your home that did not belong to you?" "Q. What has become of the various children or babies who have been taken into your home on these various occasions,—have they all married or all died? What has become of them?" "Q. Please state the name of the two children who lived with you at your place between Santa Monica and Los Angeles, and who their parents were." "Q. When did you first meet Mrs. Peltier in California?" Witness, having testified that Mrs. Peltier had recently written in the memorandum book of witness the name of the justice who married her to Kasson, was asked: "Why did she write it?" "Q. Do you know where Mr. Wilson and his stepdaughter, Sara Milliken, and Mrs. Goldman, came from when they arrived at your place in Oakland, for the purpose of being witnesses in this case?" "Q. Who paid the rent for the house you occupied with these other witnesses in Oakland?" "Q. How long did you know the people to whom you gave your key to your house in Los Angeles when you came to Oakland?" "Q. Why did you not deliver the key to Mrs. Simmons, whom you brought from the East with you?" "Q. Have you made any arrangements for the future as to where you will go to live?" "Q. Who was the man who came to you in Los Angeles and asked you about your having lived in St. Louis?" To each of the foregoing questions respondents objected, the court sustained the objection, and appellant took an exception to the ruling; and, as was said in People v. Benson, supra, "it is difficult to see on what ground this evidence was excluded." Many of the objections were on the general ground that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, not proper cross-examination, etc.; but one of the grounds of objection to quite a number of questions was that "counsel for plaintiff had cross-examined as to that matter,"—the fact being that after the witness had testified in chief she had to some extent been interrogated by counsel for the plaintiff, Lindy, before the cross-examination by appellant began. Even if, under the law of evidence, appellant had no right to cross-examine as to a matter about which plaintiff had examined the witness, still the rulings would not be justified because the record does not show that to any considerable extent there has been such examination by plaintiff; certainly the greater part of the questions asked by appellant would not be within such a rule. It is evident, however, that the court erroneously proceeded upon the theory that there is such a rule of evidence as above indicated. The record shows that, after a question had been asked by counsel for appellant, the following occurred: "Counsel for defendants objected to the question upon the ground that counsel for plaintiff has cross-examined in regard to this matter. The Court: She has been examined as to that. Mr. Levinsky: I beg to differ, not by me. The Court: She has been examined by Mr. Denson, counsel for the plaintiff. Mr. Levinsky: Your honor, please, do I understand that you will not permit me to cross-examine this or other witnesses upon any matter that Mr. Denson, counsel for plaintiff, may have cross-examined upon?"

The Court: That is exactly it." After some argument of the point by the counsel for appellant, the court said: "I will sustain the objection."

It is not true, as a legal proposition, that in a proceeding under section 1664 one party can be rightfully precluded from cross-examining a hostile witness as to a certain matter, upon the ground that another party had previously examined him as to that matter. Under this section each person who appears, and, either by complaint or answer, sets up a claim of heirship, etc., peculiar to himself, is an actor, and has a separate and independent right to conduct his case according to his own judgment, including the right to ask proper questions of witnesses of hostile parties. After the parties have been brought into court by petition, notice, etc., the one who chooses first to file a complaint is called, for convenience, the "plaintiff," and the others are called "defendants," and their pleadings are called "answers"; but the requirement as to each pleading is substantially the same,—that is, it must set forth "the facts constituting his claim to heirship," etc. The averments of the pleadings show which parties are hostile to each other, and each has a right to cross-examine the witnesses of a hostile party. In the case at bar the attitude of appellant was adverse to that of all the other parties. She had her own theory of her case, and her counsel could not be compelled to yield his judgment as to cross-examination of a witness to that of counsel for plaintiff. Of course, in a proceeding under section 1664, when there are numerous parties, a court could, in its discretion, prevent frequent and apparently useless repetitions of the same questions by different parties; but the rulings of the court in the case at bar, above set forth, as presented by the record, cannot be justified on that ground.

There are many other exceptions relied on by appellant, but many of them may not arise on another trial, and they are too numerous to be separately discussed here. It is necessary to say, however, that it was error to overrule the objection of appellant's counsel to this question asked her when a witness on cross-examination: "Is it not a fact that the house you were keeping in Marysville was a house of prostitution?" People v. Crandall (Cal.) 57 Pac. 785; In re James' Estate, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 578, 1008, and cases cited on page 657, 124 Cal., and page 580, 57 Pac. It may be stated, generally, that appellant was too much restricted in her cross-examination of many of respondents' witnesses, and particularly in the cross-examination of respondents' witnesses Goldman, Clark, McChesney, Robin, and Portier. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the appellant, Mary E. Mann, is granted a new trial.

SUNKLER v. MCKENZIE. (S. F. 1,309)

INSOLVENCY—JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

Plaintiff was adjudged insolvent, and petitioned the court to have a homestead in certain farm land set apart to him. While this proceeding was pending, the court entered an order directing the assignee to sell all the grapes growing on the land, which he did, and plaintiff filed a petition to require the assignee to pay the proceeds of the sale to him, which was denied. Held, that since the order denying such relief was a final order, and appealable to the supreme court, under Insolvent Act 1895, §§ 64, 71, authorizing appeals from an order for or against an insolvent on a petition to set aside property claimed to be exempt, no appeal having been taken, such order was res judicata in a subsequent independent action by such insolvent for the same relief.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Napa county.

W. H. Barrows, for appellant. C. J. Beerstecher, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action to recover the value of a certain crop of grapes grown upon land claimed by plaintiff to be a homestead. On June 19, 1895, plaintiff recorded his declaration of homestead upon certain farm land in Napa county. June 28th he was adjudged insolvent upon his own petition. August 19th he pe-tioned to have a homestead set apart to him in the insolvency proceedings. On September 23d the petition was heard, and the court found that the premises were of greater value than $5,000, and that Sunkler was entitled to have a homestead set apart to him of value no greater than $5,000, and three appraisers were appointed to appraise and admeasure the premises. They made report November 26th, setting apart certain 200 acres, including the dwelling, valued by them at $5,000, but "the crop had been removed, and did not enter as a factor in such valuation"; and on December 30th the court entered its decree confirming said report, "awarding and setting apart to said insolvent, as a homestead, the land and premises thus admeasured." On June 28th aforesaid, "a crop of grapes had just formed and commenced to grow on the grapevines then growing on said homestead property." They thereafter grew and matured about September 28th. On September 13th, and "while said proceedings were pending to set aside the homestead above recited, an order was made by the * * * court, in the matter of said * * * insolvency," directing the assignee therein (defendant in this action) to sell all the grapes growing on said land, pursuant to which he sold the crop, realizing $600 for the grapes grown on the portion of the land awarded Sunkler as a homestead. The court made the following finding: "That on the 11th day of January, 1896, plaintiff, said insolvent, filed in said court and matter his petition praying that said assignee be directed to pay over to petitioner said sum of six hundred dollars, in which petition the plaintiff submitted to the court all the matters and things in his complaint herein set out, and sought an adjudication of the rights and all thereof in this action asserted by him. An answer was filed therein by the assignee objecting to the making of such an order, and said matter was duly set for hearing, the respective counsel appearing therein; whereupon testimony, oral and documentary, was offered by the respective parties, and the merits of said cause were fully argued and considered, and the cause submitted on briefs to be filed. Thereafter, and on March 7, 1896, the court made and rendered its decision therein, finding upon all the issues framed by such petition and answer thereto, and adjudging that petitioner was not entitled to recover said sum or any part thereof. Judgment was thereupon entered accordingly, and thereafter, and on the 15th day of April, 1896, written notice of such decision was duly served by defendant's attorney on the attorney for plaintiff, and no exception to or appeal from said decision or judgment was ever taken, nor has the same been sought to be modified or set aside, but still stands as made and entered in said matter." After the insolvent had failed to recover upon his petition in the insolvency proceeding, he commenced this independent action, in which judgment went against him, and hence this appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

Section 64 of the insolvency act of 1895 provides that "it shall be the duty of the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings to exempt and set apart, for the use and benefit of said insolvent, such real and personal property as is exempt from execution," and the section provides that there shall be notice of the hearing of the application. Section 71 of the act provides that an appeal may be taken to the supreme court "(5) from an order against or in favor of setting apart homestead or other property claimed as exempt from execution." Appellant claims that the judgment entered denying his petition of January 11, 1896, and adjudging that the funds in the assignee's hands belonged to the creditors of the insolvent, was merely an interlocutory order made upon motion, and that he was not precluded thereby from bringing a separate action to recover the property. Mr. Freeman says: "The tendency of the recent adjudications is to inquire whether an issue or question has been in fact presented for decision and necessarily decided, and, if so, to treat it as res judicata, though the decision is the determination of a motion or summary proceeding, and not an independent action. This is especially true when the decision did not involve a mere question of the proper form or time of proceeding, but was the determination of a substantial matter of right, upon which the parties interested had a right to be heard upon issues of law or fact or both, and these issues, or some of them, were necessarily decided by the court as the basis of the order which it finally entered granting or denying the relief sought." Freem. Judgm. § 326, and cases cited. Appellant concedes that the court had the power to give or withhold the relief sought, at its pleasure; but he contends that the order was not final nor appealable, and therefore was not a bar to this action. Some of the cases place importance upon the fact that the order is appealable where it is pleaded in bar. If the statute did not make the order in the present case one from which an appeal may be taken, a different question might arise, upon which we express no opinion. But we think the order here was appealable. The relief asked by the insolvent in his petition rested on the claim that the property was exempt from execution. It could have no other foundation, and the court must have so regarded the issues, for it found that the money was not exempt. The subject-matter of the petition was identical with that in controversy here. The parties were the same, and in the same right, and the petition was presented to a court of competent jurisdiction.* The fact that defendant here was not sued in his capacity as assignee can make no difference. He held the money in that capacity, and defended in that capacity, and the identity of the two actions cannot be destroyed by making him a defendant in the present action in his individual capacity. The identities demanded by the law to make the matter res judicata were fully supplied. Id. § 252. It is familiar law, as well as manifest justice, that a man should not be vexed twice with the same litigation. This rule is not without its exceptions. But when, as here, a question has once been fully litigated, and every opportunity given to either party to present his case, and to have any supposed errors in the lower court corrected by review in the highest court, it would be an abuse of the rights of a litigant to compel him to enter upon a second trial of the same question. In this case the insolvent presented a formal petition in writing, in the proceeding which he himself had instituted. The assignee answered. The cause was tried upon evidence submitted, documentary and oral. The case was argued upon briefs, and submitted for decision. The court made full findings, and entered judgment thereon, and no steps were taken to renew the motion, to set aside or vacate the judgment, or appeal therefrom. This judgment, in our opinion, became an adjudication of the matter in controversy and final as to the facts then litigated. See the subject discussed and the cases cited in Commissioners v. McIntosh, 30 Kan. 234, 1 Pac. 572.

It becomes immaterial whether the court erred in finding that plaintiff did not reside upon the premises when he filed his declaration of homestead, and it is also immaterial by what right he claimed the proceeds of the grapes as property exempt from execution. Whatever was the basis of his right, the right itself was litigated, and the judgment is a bar to the present action. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COLE. (Cr. 452.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1900.)

CRIMINAL LAW—HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—RECORD ON APPEAL.

1. Where error is admitted by the state on appeal, as to material portions of the charge, the court will not consider certified copies of instructions alleged to have been given at the request of defendant, similar to those of the state, when such instructions do not bear the signature of the trial judge, nor purport to have been requested by any one.

2. Where the charge of the court, and requests to charge, are inserted in the record on appeal as part of the judgment roll, it is unnecessary to reinsert them as part of the bill of exceptions.

3. On a trial for murder, there was evidence that deceased, a woman, was subject to epileptic fits, particularly when under the influence of alcohol; that defendant and deceased were out driving together while intoxicated, and that defendant drove home about 3 o'clock in the morning with the dead body of deceased by his side, her head against his breast, and partly covered by a buggy robe, while her clothing was torn, indicating a struggle on the ground; that an autopsy revealed appearances which, according to some of the medical testimony, indicated strangulation, but which other experts claimed were not inconsistent with the theory that she died from the effects of an epileptic fit, or from slow suffocation by the buggy robe. Held, that there was sufficient evidence to support a verdict of murder in the second degree.

4. Before the indictment of defendant, his wife made a long, unsworn statement to the district attorney, part of which was hearsay, about the circumstances of the death of deceased, and of her own troubles with defendant. At the trial the wife was a witness for defendant, and some of her testimony was at variance with her previous statements to the district attorney. Held, that only so much of such statement should be allowed to go to the jury as was in conflict with her testimony at the trial on material points.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county.

Joseph S. Cole was indicted for murder, and from a judgment of conviction for murder in the second degree he appeals. Reversed.

Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

BEATTY, C. J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The assignments of error upon the rulings of the trial court are very numerous, and the attorney general confesses that several of them are well founded. In view of this confession of error, we deem it unnecessary to enter upon a particular discussion of many of the points presented in the brief and argument on the part of the appellant. We will, however, advert briefly to some matters involved in the further proceedings to be taken in the case.

The attorney general, among other things, admits that the trial judge, in his charge to the jury, misstated the law applicable to the case in several particulars. In consequence of this admission, the district attorney of the county where the conviction was had asked leave to amend the record here by filing certified copies of certain instructions alleged to have been given at the request of the defendant, and which, it is suggested, contain the same propositions which are complained of in the charge of the court. We do not find that this suggestion is borne out by a comparison of the two sets of instructions, but if it were we could not take notice of the fact, for the reason that these alleged requests to charge are not authenticated in any manner that would entitle them to be treated as a part of the record. They are not included in any bill of exceptions. Not one of them bears the signature of the trial judge, and they do not purport to have been requested by any one. The provisions of the Penal Code (sections 1127, 1176, 1207), and the numerous decisions of this court construing them, and the corresponding sections of the old criminal practice act, point out very plainly the mode of authenticating the charge of the court and the requests to charge, with the rulings thereon, so as to make them a part of the record. These directions of the statute should be observed, for otherwise the charge of the court, and the requests to charge, whether allowed or refused, can only become a part of the record by being incorporated in a bill of exceptions. In this case the alleged requests to charge are not authenticated in either of the methods prescribed by the statute.

The condition of this record gives occasion to advert to a fault of practice, by no means uncommon, which is productive of unnecessary expense and inconvenience. It very frequently happens that the entire charge of the court—both that which the court has given of its own motion and the requests to charge—is inserted in the record twice, once as a part of the judgment roll, under section 1207 of the Penal Code, and again as a part of the defendant's bill of exceptions. We would suggest that if the charges are properly authenticated, as they should be, and thus become a part of the judgment roll, there is no more propriety in setting them out again at large in the bill of exceptions than there would be in putting the indictment or information, minutes of the plea and of the trial, and judgment in the bill of exceptions. When anything is properly in the record once, it is worse than useless to repeat it in a bill of exceptions; for the only result is to cumber the transcript with useless matter, making it more inconvenient to examine, and imposing an unnecessary expense upon the counties for printing. In this case the charge of the court, which is very lengthy, is printed in the transcript no less than three times,—once as a part of the judgment roll, where, for lack of authentication, it was not entitled to be placed, and twice in the bill of exceptions, where one insertion would seem to have been sufficient.

Returning from this digression to the matters urged by the appellant as grounds for reversal of the judgment, it will be sufficient, for the purposes of this opinion, to make a very general statement of the facts of the case. The defendant was accused of the murder of his wife's sister. The deceased was an epileptic, and subject to very violent attacks, followed by several hours of stupor or insensibility, and was peculiarly liable to such attacks when under the influence of alcohol, a condition in which she was not infrequently found. About 10 o'clock in the evening, after drinking more or less whisky, she and the defendant, who was also partially intoxicated, entered a buggy, and drove to a saloon, where they obtained another bottle of whisky, with which they departed. At 3 o'clock next morning the defendant drove up to his house with the dead body of the deceased by his side, her head being against his breast, and partly covered by a buggy robe. Her clothes were torn and disarranged, and there were evidences that she had been in a struggle on the ground. To his wife and others who were then present, the defendant at that time offered no particular explanation of what had occurred, merely insisting that the woman was drunk, and not dead. Subsequently he stated that, after procuring the whisky at the saloon, his sister-in-law had proposed a moonlight drive; that she held the reins, and was driving along a country road, when she suddenly fell out of the buggy. He got out, and attempted to lift her back into her seat, but she struggled and resisted, and he was unable to do so. Becoming exhausted, he fell asleep. When he woke up he made another effort, succeeding in getting the woman back in the buggy, and, the night being cold, drew the buggy robe over her. The theory of the defense was that deceased fell from the buggy in an epileptic fit brought on by intoxication, and that she died in consequence of the fit, or was perhaps suffocated by the buggy robe while in the condition of stupor following the convulsion. The theory of the prosecution seems to have been that she was strangled by defendant while making a felonious assault upon her. An autopsy revealed appearances which, according to some of the medical testimony, indicated strangulation. Other experts testified, in effect, that there was nothing in such appearances inconsistent with the theory that she died from the effects of the epileptic fit, or from slow suffocation by the buggy robe. Aside from the medical testimony, there were several circumstances, some of which may have had a tendency to sustain the theory of the prosecution, while others were of an opposite tendency. Many witnesses testified to the good reputation of the defendant for peace and quiet, honesty, and integrity.

Such being the case, we cannot sustain the contention of the defendant that the evidence was wholly insufficient in law to support the verdict. The case was one proper to be submitted to the jury, and if the rulings of the court in other respects had been free from error the judgment would have to be affirmed.

Neither did the court err in overruling the motions of defendant to set aside the information and in arrest of judgment. The ground upon which these motions were based was the alleged fact that the district attorney, upon whose sworn complaint the defendant was arrested and examined before the committing magistrate, had no personal knowledge of the facts of the homicide. The case of Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619, is cited by appellant in support of his assignments of error respecting this matter. The decision in that case has no application to a motion to set aside an information or in arrest of judgment. When a charge of this kind has been examined by a magistrate, and the evidence taken at the examination warrants an order holding the defendant to answer, the imperfections of the complaint, if any, are cured, and the commitment is legal. As to the motion in arrest of judgment, that can be based only upon defects appearing upon the face of the indictment or information. Pen. Code, §§ 1012, 1185.

But the court did commit an error gravely prejudicial to the rights of defendant in permitting the district attorney to pursue the course of cross-examination he adopted with respect to the wife of the defendant. It seems that a few days after the death of her sister the wife of defendant visited the office of the district attorney, and made a long statement, partly hearsay, about the circumstances surrounding her sister's death and her own troubles and differences with defendant. At the trial she was a witness for the defendant, and some of her testimony was at variance with portions of her previous statements to the district attorney. It was entirely proper, of course, in laying a foundation for impeachment, to question her as to those parts of her previous statement which were in conflict with material portions of her testimony at the trial. But the court permitted the district attorney to read portions of her statement, and question her as to their correctness, which had no relation to her testimony at the trial, and several of which contained matters wholly immaterial and irrelevant, and only calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant. It is not necessary to go into a detailed statement of the particulars in which this cross-examination exceeded proper limits. For the guidance of the court in case of a new trial, it is sufficient to say that, if the wife of defendant is again a witness in his behalf, her previous statements can be laid before the jury only so far as they are in conflict with her testimony on material points. The errors in the charge of the court being confessed, it is unnecessary to specify or review them, as they are not likely to be repeated on a new trial. The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and cause remanded.

REED v. JOHNSON. (S. F. 1,328.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1900.)

APPEAL — TIME—PLEADING—COUNTERCLAIM—VALIDITY—FINDINGS—FAILURE TO FIND —HARMLESS ERROR.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, providing that an exception to the decision or verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, an appeal not taken within such time must be considered and determined on the judgment roll alone.

2. The court's failure to find on the issues raised by an answer which did not constitute a valid counterclaim was not prejudicial error.

3. Plaintiff sued, as executrix, on a note made by defendant to deceased. The answer, by way of counterclaim, averred that the deceased and defendant were partners in a business which they afterwards incorporated, each owning one-half the stock; that deceased obtained and appropriated to his own use moneys of the corporation, one-half of which he owed defendant at the time of his death. For the difference between this amount and that claimed to be due on the note, defendant asked judgment. There was no averment that the claim had ever been presented to the executrix for allowance. Held, that the answer did not set up a valid counterclaim.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by Abbie B. Reed, executrix of Charles W. Reed, deceased, against S. R. Johnson. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Campbell and J. P. Moore, for appellant. Charles Wesley Reed and Archer & Archer, for respondent.

VAN DYKE, J. The judgment in this case was entered April 20, 1897. Subsequently defendant moved for a new trial on a bill of exceptions, which was denied. Thereupon the defendant appealed from the judgment and from said order denying a new trial, January 4, 1898. The appeal from the order was dismissed April 4, 1898, and a rehearing denied April 30, 1898. The appeal from the judgment having been taken more than 60 days after the rendition thereof, it must be considered and determined upon the judgment roll alone, without reference to the question whether the evidence was sufficient to support the findings and the judgment or not. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1. The action is founded upon a promissory note made by the defendant to C. W. Reed, deceased, dated October 6, 1894, for the sum of $3,661.89. The complaint admits certain payments having been made on said note, and demands judgment for the balance claimed to be due in the sum of $1,884.89, together with interest and costs. The answer, by way of counterclaim, avers that said Reed and the defendant were partners in business, and that on or about the 1st day of January, 1894, they organized, under the laws of this state, a corporation known and designated as the C. W. Reed Company; that C. W. Reed, at divers times between August, 1894, and the 1st of March, 1896, obtained and appropriated to his own use money of the C. W. Reed Company, aggregating $7,889.85, and that at the death of Reed, March 19, 1896, he was indebted to the said company in the sum of $5,755.50, and to the defendant in the sum of $2,877.75; that the said Reed and the defendant were equal partners in the former partnership firm, and also in the C. W. Reed Company; and it is asked that the amount alleged to be due the C. W. Reed Company and the defendant from the late C. W. Reed "be allowed as a counterclaim herein, and that this defendant have judgment for the balance in his favor." There is no averment in the counterclaim that either the alleged demand due the C. W. Reed Company or the defendant was ever presented for allowance to the executrix of the estate of said Reed, deceased. The court found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and judgment was ordered and entered for the sum of $2,081.29, the balance due on the note in question; and "further finds that the answer of defendant constitutes no defense or counterclaim in this action." The main contention on the part of the appellant is that the court failed to find on the issues raised by the affirmative matter contained in the answer. The statement of new matter constituting the alleged counterclaim on the trial was deemed controverted by plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 462), and the burden was, therefore, upon the defendant to prove such affirmative matter. The appellant is not prejudiced unless the court has failed to make such findings in his behalf as would countervail the other findings in favor of the plaintiff; and, as error in the court below is not to be presumed, but must be shown by the appellant, if the omitted findings must have been adverse to the appellant, their omission is not error sufficient to authorize reversal. Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 156; Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; F. A. Hihn Co. v. Fleckner, 106 Cal. 95, 39 Pac. 214. The point under consideration, therefore, must be determined adversely to the appellant. If, however, findings had been made in accordance with the allegations of the counterclaim, they would not have had any legal effect upon the right of the plaintiff to the judgment sought by her. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. QUINN. (Cr. 589.)

CRIMINAL LAW—INDICTMENT—GRAND JURY—WITNESSES—INDORSEMENT.

Though the indorsement on an indictment of the surname only of a witness testifying before a grand jury does not comply with the statute requiring that the names of witnesses testifying before it should be indorsed thereon, such irregularity was harmless, where accused knew the person named almost immediately after the finding of the indictment.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county.

David Quinn was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. Charles Jones, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. Defendant appeals from a judgment of manslaughter, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial. He insists that the names of the witnesses examined by the grand jury were not indorsed upon the indictment, the statute containing such a requirement. This contention rests upon the fact that the name of a certain witness before the grand jury, to wit, G. W. Ogden, is indorsed upon the indorsement as "—— Ogden." The purpose of the aforesaid requirement of the law is to inform both the people and the defendant of the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony the indictment is based, and thereby to give them both an opportunity to secure these witnesses at the trial. People v. Northey, 77 Cal. 629, 19 Pac. 865, and 20 Pac. 129. In the case at bar there was a noncompliance with the statute, but the irregularity was harmless, as the defendant almost immediately after the finding of the indictment knew the particular person who was named as Ogden upon the indictment. People v. Crowey, 56 Cal. 36.

It is next claimed that the court committed error in refusing certain instructions offered by defendant. In this regard it is sufficient to say that all matters material and legally sound in the rejected instructions were given by the court in its charge to the jury. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

TRIAL—FINDINGS—JUDGMENT—PLEADING—LIMITATIONS—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—APPEAL.

1. A finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true is sufficient to support a judgment, where the complaint states a good cause of action.

2. Where a complaint for money had and received, filed July 1, 1895, alleged that the cause of action arose "on or about January, 1894," a finding that all the allegations therein are true is an adverse finding on defendant's plea of limitations.

3. A mere reference in a plea in bar to Civ. Code, § 1624 (the statute of frauds), is insufficient as a plea of such statute.

4. A judgment supported by sufficient findings will not be reversed because of existence of immaterial findings not within the issues.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Yolo county.

Bush & Ish, for appellant. R. Clark, for respondent.

GRAY, C. This is an action to recover $400 alleged to have been collected by defendant from one Mary A. Black in pursuance of an agreement on her part to "refund" a certain $400 previously paid out by plaintiff. On appeal no objection is made to the complaint, and it seems to be conceded that it is sufficient to support the judgment. The appeal is from the judgment alone, and the record consists of the judgment roll only, and contains no bill of exceptions. The only reason urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the findings of the court do not correspond with the allegations of the complaint, are self-contradictory, and are in "conflict with the issues" made by the pleadings. There are two findings of fact, numbered, respectively, 1 and 2. The matter set out in the transcript headed "Findings," and purporting to be findings drawn in blank, but not signed or filed, is of no significance, and will be disregarded. In finding 1 the court finds each and every allegation of plaintiff's complaint to be true. Treating the complaint as stating a cause of action,—and we think it does,—this finding alone is sufficient to support the judgment. It has long been held that a finding by reference to the complaint is sufficient. Johnson v. Klein, 70 Cal. 186, 11 Pac. 606; Gale v. Bradbury, 116 Cal. 39, 47 Pac. 778. The answer in the case consisted of denials of the allegations of the complaint and a plea of several statutes of limitations, and, inasmuch as the complaint was filed July 1, 1895, and shows that the cause of action set out arose "on or about the month of January, 1894," the finding may properly be treated as disposing of the plea of the statute of limitations. The reference in defendant's plea in bar to section 1624, Civ. Code (the statute of frauds), we think must be the result of a mistake, as we find no reference in appellant's brief to such statute. But, if the reference was intentional, it is certainly insufficient as a plea of the statute of frauds, and no finding as to it was necessary. We are inclined to agree with appellant's statement that the facts referred to in the second finding "are entirely outside of the case, and have nothing whatever to do with the case"; for thus the finding appears from an inspection of the record as it now stands. Perhaps, if the evidence had been brought up, it would have shown the connection. But, be that as it may, there is nothing in the second finding contradictory of the complaint or of the first finding. Everything stated in the second finding may exist just as there stated and still the allegations of the complaint be true. We may, then, treat the second finding as entirely immaterial, and regard it as surplusage, and still the judgment would find support in the first finding. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

In re GRIFFITH'S ESTATE.

COMPODONICO v. GRIFFITH et al. (S. F. 2,119.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1900.)
ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE — ADVANCED BIDS
AFTER REPORT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1552, giving the court a discretion, upon return being made of an administrator's sale of real estate, to accept the offer of an advanced bid, if one is made, or order a new sale, the court is not limited to the alternative of accepting the first offer that may be made or ordering a new sale, but may receive as many bids as may be made, and, upon a consideration of the whole, determine whether to accept the highest bid or order a new sale.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Proceedings upon the return of a sale of real estate by H. M. Griffith, administrator, wherein one Compodonico made an advance offer of 10 per cent. for the property. From an order accepting a subsequent bid, made by Sarah A. Wilson, and confirming a sale to her, Compodonico appeals. Affirmed.

A. D. Splivalo, for appellant. J. O. B. Wyatt, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. At the hearing of the return of sale of certain real estate made by the administrator under an order of the court, the appellant made an offer for the property of 10 per cent. more in amount than that named in the return, whereupon the court continued the further hearing of the matter for one week. At that time the appellant asked the court that the sale be confirmed to him, but the respondent Sarah A. Wilson, who was the original purchaser at the administrator's sale, offered to pay for the property a sum in excess of that bid by the appellant, and, the appellant declining to make any further bid, the court accepted the bid of Mrs. Wilson, and confirmed the sale to her. The present appeal is from this order, and it is contended by the appellant that when he made the bid of 10 per cent. advance the court, under section 1552, Code Civ. Proc., had no option except to confirm the sale to him or to order a new sale. After the appellant had made his offer, it was within the jurisdiction of the court to postpone a further hearing upon the matter until another day, and at the hearing so postponed it had the same jurisdiction to receive additional bids as it had at the original hearing. The provision in section 1552, giving the court a discretion to accept the offer of an advanced bid or to order a new sale, does not limit its exercise of that discretion to the alternative of accepting the first offer that may be made or ordering a new sale, but it is authorized to receive as many bids as may be made, and, upon a consideration of all the bids, may then determine whether to accept the highest or to order a new sale. The object of the provision in the above section is that the court may secure as high a price for the property as possible, and, if it can accomplish this result without subjecting the estate to the expense and delay attendant upon a new sale, it would seem to be in the exercise of a wise discretion to permit a competitive bidding for the property at the hearing upon the return. The order is affirmed.

RYLAND v. COMMERCIAL & SAVINGS BANK OF SAN JOSE. (S. F. 1,827.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1900.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—WHEN STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, providing that actions against a stockholder of a corporation, to enforce statutory liability, must be brought within three years after the liability is created, limitations begin to run, as against the demand of a surety who has been compelled to pay the debt of the corporation, from the day of such payment, and not from the date of the original obligation.

2. A surety who pays the note of a corporation before action thereon is barred as to the corporation has a right of action therefor against a stockholder of the corporation, although at the time of payment an action against the stockholder by the payee of the note would have been barred, under Code Civ. Proc. § 359, limiting actions to enforce a stockholder's liability to three years after the liability accrued.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by John W. Ryland against the Commercial & Savings Bank of San Jose to enforce a stockholder's liability to plaintiff as surety for a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jackson Hatch, for appellant. S. F. Leib, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Action against defendant as a stockholder in the Paul O. Burns Wine Company, a corporation. Defendant pleaded the statute of limitations by demurrer, which being overruled, and defendant declining to answer, judgment passed for plaintiff, from which this appeal is prosecuted. On August 15, 1894, the wine company was indebted to defendant and others in the sum of $30,000, to pay which it on that day made to defendant three promissory notes, for $10,000 each, payable, respectively, September 25, 1894, October 15, 1894, and November 15, 1894, and they were indorsed by plaintiff and his assignors. On July 27, 1895, the wine company borrowed from one Cozzens the sum of $10,000, payable one year after date, said money being borrowed to pay the above note for $10,000 falling due September 25, 1894, and it was so paid by the wine company. Plaintiff and his assignors indorsed the note given to Cozzens. The wine company paid these several liabilities in part, and plaintiff and his assignors were compelled to pay the balance, which they did, as follows: January 21, 1897, $3,000 on the Cozzens note; January 25, 1897, $400 to defendant; January 28, 1897, $20 to defendant; April 8, 1897, $1,200 on the Cozzens note; April 8, 1897, $1,150 to defendant; April 8, 1897, $50 to defendant; February 21, 1898, $6,073.75 to defendant on the note due October 15, 1894; February 21, 1898, $2,234.75 on the Cozzens note. The complaint was filed August 23, 1898.

Appellant's contention is that the indebtedness of the wine company, amounting to $30,000 on August 15, 1894, was created on that day, within the meaning of section 359, Code Civ. Proc., and the statute of limitations commenced to run in favor of appellant as a stockholder on that day, at least as to the $20,000 represented by the two notes which were then given, maturing, respectively, October 15, 1894, and November 15, 1894, and that the statute began to run as to the remaining $10,000 note at least as early as July 27, 1895, when the $10,000 note was given to Cozzens; that unless the payment by the sureties can be held to be the creation of an entirely new indebtedness of the wine company to them, and consequently of the wine company's stockholders to them, or in some way stopped the running of the statute, the judgment was erroneous. Respondent's contention is that the action is upon an indebtedness created by the fact that a payment was made by a surety of his principal's debt; that this debt is from the principal to the surety, and is not the other debt, for which both were bound to the payee of the notes; that it is an entirely new and distinct debt, as would be the debt created had the principal borrowed the money from the surety, or from some one else, and with the money thus borrowed had paid the notes. In respondent's view of the case we concur. Plaintiff's and his assignor's primary liability was to the payee of the notes. By signing the notes they became responsible to the payee for the performance of the obligation of the wine company. Civ. Code, § 2831. When they, as sureties, paid the obligations, the wine company became bound to reimburse them (Id. 2847), and not until the sureties had discharged the obligation of the principal, or some part of it, did any liability from the principal to the sureties arise. The statute of limitations, as against the payee, began to run in favor of the stockholders of the wine company at the date of the notes (Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 Pac. 335); but, as there was as yet no liability of the stockholders to the sureties, there was nothing, so far as concerned the sureties, for the statute to operate upon. The statute could not be set in motion against the sureties until a liability to them had arisen, and no liability arose until they paid the debt of their principal or some part of it. The rule is thus stated by Mr. Wood in his work on Limitations (volume 1, p. 394): "Where a surety is compelled to pay a debt, the statute begins to run against his claim from the day of such payment, and not from the date of the original obligation" (see, also, 1 Brandt Sur. § 230; see, also, cases cited 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 792); and there can be no different rule where the principal is a corporation. It appears from the complaint that the executors of Peter O. Minor, deceased, one of the sureties, paid $6,073.75 on the note falling due October 15, 1894; and appellant claims that, this payment being made more than three years after the note was due, the debt arising from the payment was barred as to the stockholders by section 359, Code Civ. Proc., and therefore the judgment should be modified by striking from it the proportionate share of the $6,073.75 of appellant. The rule above quoted from Wood on Limitations is subject to the exception that the surety must have paid the original debt before the statute had run thereon (volume 1, p. 398); for the law will not raise a promise on the part of the principal to reimburse the surety where the surety was under no legal obligation to pay. But the surety was under obligation to the payee of the note, jointly and severally with the wine company, for four years after it became due. No liability of the corporation or its stockholders to the surety arose until he paid the note or some part of it, and as, in the present case, he paid within the time during which he was liable to the payee, the case is not within the exception above stated, and the statute as to him began to run from the date of payment by him. The liability of the corporation to the payee was not barred until after four years elapsed, although the payee could not sue the stockholders on the note after three years. But this is not the liability of the stockholders to the surety. The law implied an agreement on their part to indemnify the surety whenever he paid the obligation, and this implied agreement was distinct from their liability to the payee. The right of action upon the liability arising out of this implied agreement accrued upon payment by the surety, and not before, and it must follow that section 359 refers to this liability arising out of the agreement of the stockholders to indemnify the surety, and not out of the original obligation of the corporation to the payee. The judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: BRITT, C.; HAYNES, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

LYON v. ROBERTSON et al. (S. F. 1,125.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1900.)

BILLS AND NOTES—RENEWAL—CONSIDERATION—WIDOW'S LIABILITY.

1. The surrender of valid notes to one of the joint makers for cancellation is a good consideration for a new note given by him and the widow of the other maker in renewal thereof.

2. A widow is liable on her note given in renewal of prior notes to which her deceased husband was a party, though she gave it under misapprehension as to her liability for his debts, not induced by any misrepresentation by the payee.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county.

Action by W. P. Lyon against Aurelia Robertson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Aurelia Robertson appeals. Affirmed.

D. W. & C. E. Herrington and H. V. Morehouse, for appellants. Nicolas Bowden, for respondent.

BRITT, C. Action on a promissory note of date August 1, 1893, by the terms whereof the appellant Aurelia Robertson, then bearing the name of Orilla Chynoweth, and two others,—one of whom was W. P. Lyon, Jr.,—jointly and severally promised to pay to plaintiff the sum of $3,699.50. Mrs. Robertson and her present husband, who is joined with her pro forma, defend on the ground that she executed the note without consideration. Plaintiff had judgment.

At the trial there was evidence tending to show that said Aurelia, or Orilla, as she was formerly called, was the wife of one Louis Chynoweth, who died May 10, 1893. Louis Chynoweth, at the time of his death, and said W. P. Lyon, Jr., were jointly indebted to the plaintiff on three certain promissory notes, by them executed, for the aggregate principal sum of $3,500, bearing interest. Said Louis and certain other persons together owned a farm and carried on the business thereof. Mrs. Robertson testified: "After his death, the partners of Louis in the business spoke of it, and treated me as if I had succeeded to his interest in the premises, and was liable for his debts as his successor, so that I believed I was liable for his debts." She executed the note in suit, and plaintiff accepted the same, upon the mutual understanding that it was "to take the place" of the said prior notes to which said deceased had been a party, and plaintiff thereupon surrendered the old notes to said W. P. Lyon, Jr., who canceled them. The court below held that the new note was supported by sufficient consideration, and we are of the same opinion. Prejudice suffered by the promisee, as well as benefit conferred on the promisor, may be the consideration for a contract. Civ. Code, § 1605. There is no doubt that the relinquishment by a creditor of a prior valid demand is a sufficient consideration for a new promise in his favor. There was such relinquishment in this case. That the old notes were delivered to W. P. Lyon, Jr., and not to the appellant Aurelia, can make no difference. Lyon, Jr., being a joint maker, both of the old notes and the new one, was entitled to receive the former when they were replaced by the latter. Nor is it of any moment that appellant may have been mistaken as to her legal relation to her deceased husband's estate or to his debts. It does not appear that plaintiff in any way contributed to her misapprehension, or even had knowledge thereof. The cases cited for appellant—Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 211, 41 Pac. 1028, Rosenberg v. Ford, 85 Cal. 610, 24 Pac. 779, and Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 187, 33 Pac. 862—do not support her contention. In none of them did it appear that the creditor incurred any detriment, beyond what he was already legally bound to suffer, in consequence of the wife's promise to pay the husband's debt. The judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; COOPER, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BENSON et al. v. BUNTING et al. (S. F. 1, 972.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1900.)

MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — REDEMPTION — FRAUD — MISTAKE OF LAW — PRICE — INADEQUACY — APPEAL — DISMISSAL — FICTITIOUS DEFENDANT — NOTICE.

1. A mortgagor's bill to redeem alleged that defendant had employed plaintiffs' attorneys to deceive them, and lead them to believe that they had a full year to redeem; that the representations made by said attorneys were false, and made in a manner not warranted by the information of the defendant or his attorneys, and made with intent to deceive plaintiffs. Held, that such averment was a sufficient allegation of fraud, within Civ. Code, § 1572, declaring fraud to consist in the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true.

2. Where all parties to a foreclosure of a mortgage misunderstood the law to permit a redemption at any time within one year, and an offer to redeem was made within that period, and refused, there was such a mistake of law as would justify a judgment permitting a mortgagor to redeem after the legal period of redemption had expired.

3. Inadequacy of the price paid at foreclosure sale is a proper allegation in a bill in equity to redeem after expiration of statutory period of redemption, since it shows that the equity is valuable and important.

4. An appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to bill in equity will not be dismissed on the ground that fictitious defendants named in the bill have not been served with notice of the appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by F. R. Benson and others against William L. Bunting and others. From a judgment dismissing the complaint on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

B. B. Haskell, for appellants. Ed. C. Harrison, for respondents.

HAYNES, C. In 1892, Margaret Reese and Mary E. Dever, two of the plaintiffs in the action, executed to one William M. Iburg a mortgage upon the real estate described in the complaint herein, to secure the payment of money. In a proceeding to foreclose said mortgage, a decree for the sale of the mortgaged premises was entered, on April 13, 1897, and on June 1, 1897, the mortgaged premises were sold to defendant Bunting for the sum of $950, and on February 1, 1898, the commissioner who made the sale conveyed said premises to the purchaser. In January, 1898, the defendants in the foreclosure case offered to redeem said premises from said sale, and tendered to Bunting the full amount required to effect such redemption, which was refused, and this action is prosecuted to obtain a decree permitting them to redeem, notwithstanding the statutory period for redemption had expired before their offer to redeem was made. The other defendants were fictitious persons, who were not served, and Bunting will be regarded as the sole defendant.

The complaint contains two counts or causes of action,—the first alleging that plaintiffs were induced, through the fraud of the defendant, to believe that they had, under the statute, 12 months within which to redeem the premises sold; and the second count was based upon the alleged mutual mistake of all the parties, all believing and agreeing that the mortgagors had 12 months within which to redeem, when in fact the law gave them but six months. The defendant demurred to each count upon the ground that the facts stated did not constitute a cause of action. The demurrers were sustained, and judgment of dismissal entered, and plaintiffs appeal.

In 1892, when the mortgage was executed, the statute provided that redemption might be made at any time "within six months after the sale." Code Civ. Proc. § 702. This section was amended February 26, 1897, by extending the time for redemption to "twelve months," the amendment to take immediate effect; and in the second count it was alleged, in substance, that all the parties understood and agreed that said amendment, which was passed and took effect before the decree was entered in the foreclosure case, controlled, and that under it the time for redemption was extended to twelve months. It is conceded by plaintiffs that the statutory time within which redemption must be effected is fixed by the statute in force at the time the mortgage was executed, and not by one subsequently enacted, and that, under the statute, they should have redeemed within six months from the date of the sale.

It is alleged in the first cause of action that at the time of the sale, and repeatedly thereafter, until the last of January, 1898, the defendant represented to the plaintiffs that they had a full year in which to redeem; that prior to the sale the plaintiffs employed certain attorneys, who continued in their employment until the 29th of March, 1898; that on June 1, 1897 (the day of the foreclosure sale), Bunting employed the same attorneys, ostensibly to act for him in bidding for said property at said sale, but in reality to deceive the plaintiffs, and lead them to believe that they had a full year in which to redeem said property; that they, as well as defendant Bunting, then, and repeatedly afterwards, until January 31, 1898, knowing that plaintiffs reposed full confidence in them, and intending to cheat and defraud the plaintiffs in the interest and for the benefit of defendant Bunting, informed them that they had a full year in which to redeem; that these representations were false, and were so made in a manner not warranted by the information of the defendant or of his said attorneys, and were so made with intent to deceive the plaintiffs.

ing actual fraud applies only to cases of contract, as specified in section 1572 of the Civil Code; and also insists that the allegations of fraud are not sufficiently specific; that the alleged misrepresentation was of a matter of law, and not of fact, and after all was a mere matter of opinion; that there was no confidential or fiduciary relation between the plaintiffs and defendant; and that plaintiffs had no right to rely upon his representations. I think, however, that the allegations touching defendant's employment of plaintiffs' attorneys, and the allegations touching their intention in making the alleged representations, are sufficient, as tested by general demurrer; but if it be conceded that the representations made by the defendant and by the attorneys, who, it would seem from the allegations, were acting for both parties, were honestly made, and without any intention to deceive or mislead, enough is alleged to entitle plaintiffs to relief; that if upon the trial the court should find that these representations were honestly made, and without any intention to mislead or deceive the plaintiffs, and that relying upon the correctness of the representations so made they failed to redeem within six months, as they would otherwise have done, and within the twelve months, which they were assured they had under the law, they offered to redeem, and tendered the redemption money due at the date of the tender, they would be entitled to relief. It is alleged that, if they had not been informed and believed that they had a year in which to redeem their property, they would have redeemed it within the six months; that the property was of the value of $5,000, and was sold to defendant for $950. If, therefore, it be conceded that the representations touching the time for redemption were made with an honest, though erroneous, belief that they were true, no injustice would be done the defendant in permitting the plaintiffs now to redeem. Upon that supposition the defendant made his bid upon the basis of a twelve-month period for redemption, and he should have accepted their offer to redeem, made within that time, and his refusal to do so operated as a fraud upon them, and entitled them to relief in equity.

Upon this subject the supreme court of the United States said: "Defendant relies mainly upon the fact that the statutory period of redemption was allowed to expire before this bill was filed, but the court below found in this connection that, before the time had expired to redeem the property, the plaintiff was told by defendant Stephens that he would not be pushed, that the statutory time to redeem would not be insisted upon, and that the plaintiff believed and relied upon such assurance. Under such circumstances, the courts have held with great unanimity that the purchaser is estopped to insist upon the statutory period, notwithstanding the assurances were not in writing, and were made without consideration, upon the ground that the debtor was lulled into a false security. Guinn v. Locke, 1

Head, 110; Combs v. Little, 4 N. J. Eq. 310; Griffin v. Coffey, 9 B. Mon. 452; Martin v. Martin, 16 B. Mon. 8; Butt v. Butt, 91 Ind. 305; Turner v. King, 37 N. C. 132; Lucas v. Nichols, 66 Ill. 41; McMakin v. Schenck, 98 Ind. 264. In Southard v. Pope's Ex'r, 9 B. Mon. 261, 264, it is said that 'a refusal by the purchaser to accept the money and permit the redemption to be made within the time agreed would be a fraud upon the defendant in execution, and authorize an application by him to a court of equity for relief.'" Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 344, 16 Sup. Ct. 512, 516, 40 L. Ed. 721, 726.

2. As to the second count, we think it clearly sufficient to justify a judgment permitting the plaintiff to redeem. Section 1578 of the Civil Code defines a mistake of law to be: "(1) A misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing they knew and understood it, and all making substantially the same mistake as to the law." The mistake as to which statute governed the right of redemption in that particular case was one which might be readily made. The redemptioners might well rely upon the statements of the defendant and of counsel, and have adopted their views as to the time given by law for redemption. The mistake was one which related to rights which the redemptioners had in the property sold under the decree of foreclosure, and was solely in regard to the time within which an undisputed and well-understood legal right might be exercised. All understood the law alike, all making the same mistake; and where, as in this case, the mistake operates to deprive one of the parties of a valuable right, and to give the other a material advantage not contemplated by either, a court of equity will adjust their property rights as though the law relating thereto was, in fact, as the parties supposed it to be, if that becomes necessary to do justice between them. In Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, 8 Wheat. 174, 215, 5 L. Ed. 589, 600, Chief Justice Marshall said: "Although we do not find the naked principle, that relief may be granted on account of ignorance of law, asserted in the books, we find no case in which it has been decided that a plain and acknowledged mistake in law is beyond the reach of equity."

In view of our conclusions hereinbefore stated, it is not necessary to consider the question of inadequacy of the price paid for the property by the defendant, further than to say that the inadequacy here alleged, conceding that it was not so gross as to constitute a ground for vacating the sale where the statute gives a right of redemption, is a proper allegation in a bill in equity to redeem, as it shows that the equity involved is valuable and important.

Respondent contends that the appeal should be dismissed upon the ground that the two fictitious defendants named in the complaint should have been served with the notice of appeal. It is sufficient to say that no service of process was made upon them, or upon any person intended to be represented by these names, nor was there any appearance by them, or by any person other than defendant Bunting. These fictitious persons could not be affected by any judgment this court or the court below might render. I advise that the judgment appealed from be reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to each cause of action.

We concur: CHIPMAN, C.; BRITT, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to overrule the demurrer to each cause of action.

In re DOYLE & SON'S ESTATE. (L. A. 693.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1900.)

INSOLVENCY—ASSETS—SURRENDER—CREDITORS' RIGHTS.

Where, prior to insolvency proceedings against a firm, the wife of a member, who was also a creditor, received a draft belonging to the firm in good faith, without intending to defraud other creditors, but to keep the money from being wasted by attachments, her surrender of the principal part of the money to the assignee after an action was brought by him against her therefor, but before judgment, was in time to entitle her to share in the dividends, as a creditor free from fraud, though she contested the assignee's right to the balance of the proceeds of the draft, which she had used for family purposes.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county.

Judicial accounting of Gregory Perkins, assignee of the firm of D. M. Doyle & Son, insolvents. From an order allowing the claim of Lizzie R. Doyle, and from an order settling the assignee's account, he appeals. Affirmed.

Dillon & Dunning, for appellant. Dyer & Potter, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, C. Appeal of the assignee from an order allowing respondent's claim against the insolvents' estate, and an order settling the assignee's account. It appears that Doyle & Son borrowed from the wife of Doyle, Sr., the sum of $1,500 in January, 1897, part of which the firm invested in starting a grocery business in Los Angeles. The firm sold the entire stock and fixtures March 10, 1898, for $948.90; receiving at the time $200, and on March 17th the balance, $748.90. They paid to creditors the $200, and deposited in bank, to the credit of Doyle & Son, the $748.90. Within 30 days after the sale they drew out this money, and took a New York draft for the amount, payable to the order of Mrs. Doyle, and delivered it to her. The evidence is, to some extent, directed to the intention of the parties in this transaction. Without quoting from the testimony, it appears reasonably clear therefrom that the purpose of Doyle and wife was to keep the money from being wasted by attachment suits, and to hold it for an equitable distribution among all the creditors. This is apparently the view taken by the trial court in making the orders complained of, and finds support in the evidence. After Mrs. Doyle had secured possession of the draft, the creditors, March 24, 1898, began proceedings against Doyle & Son in involuntary insolvency, in which a receiver was appointed; and on the same day he brought an action against Mrs. Doyle and her husband, D. M. Doyle, to enjoin Mrs. Doyle from converting said draft into money, and for judgment against her for the delivery of the draft or its proceeds to the receiver. The court made the order enjoining Mrs. Doyle from transferring or negotiating the draft. A stipulation was entered into by the attorneys of the respective parties agreeing that the draft should be cashed, and the proceeds be deposited with the clerk of the court, "less the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, * * * to be paid to the said Lizzie R. Doyle; * * * it being understood that the payment of the said one hundred and fifty dollars, * * * and the payment of the balance of said money into court, shall not prejudice any rights of the plaintiff herein, or her proceeding in this case, or any motion heretofore made or to be hereafter made in this case." This stipulation is not dated, but must have been entered into between March 26, 1898, and May 10, 1898. The $598.90 were accordingly deposited with the clerk. On May 10th Mrs. Doyle's attorneys served and filed notice that she relinquished all right to the fund represented by the draft "heretofore placed in her hands by D. M. Doyle, in the form of a New York draft, to wit, the sum of $748.90, for the purpose of retaining or holding until settlement with creditors of said D. M. Doyle & Son could be had,—said money now being in the hands of the clerk of this court, less the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars heretofore paid over to Lizzie R. Doyle for the purpose of defraying funeral expenses, according to a certain stipulation heretofore filed,—and hereby surrender the same to the receiver, Gregory Perkins, now assignee of estate of D. M. Doyle & Son." The court on May 28th indorsed on this notice the following order: "Upon foregoing stipulation, the clerk is hereby directed to pay over to the assignee or his attorney in said action the balance of the fund in his hands in said case." Again, on May 24, 1898, Mrs. Doyle's attorneys served and filed a notice, referring to the previous notice of renunciation, offering to surrender to the assignee all her right to the fund deposited with the clerk, to wit, "the sum of $598.48, or thereabouts, or any interest in any other property belonging to said insolvents." It also appeared that on the 8th day of June, 1898, the court entered judgment in the action brought by the receiver against Mrs. Doyle and her husband. In this judgment the court recited that Mrs. Doyle had turned over the $598.90, and that defendants had offered to confess judgment for $150

"on condition that plaintiff would amend his complaint by striking out certain portions thereof," and recited that plaintiff had accordingly so amended his complaint; but these stricken-out portions are not stated or identified so as to enable us to point them out. Findings were waived, and the court adjudged that plaintiff recover $150 from defendant Lizzie R. Doyle, and costs, taxed at $25.50. The evidence adduced at that trial is not brought up. Mrs. Doyle filed her claim with the assignee for $1,634.46, which the assignee disallowed in his final report, and excluded it from his account on the ground that Mrs. Doyle had obtained a preference on account of said claim within 30 days prior to the insolvency proceedings, in violation of section 50 of the insolvency act. At the hearing the evidence referred to in the early part of this opinion, relating to the money loaned by Mrs. Doyle to the firm, was submitted, and also the proceedings above set forth; and the court ordered the assignee to amend his account by allowing Mrs. Doyle's claim for $1,310.21, and directing that, from the dividend to be paid her, the assignee deduct the amount of the judgment and costs ($175.50) theretofore entered against her.

Appellant's contention is that respondent received a preference in violation of the insolvent act, and that she, as a creditor, could not surrender the money received by her, and receive a dividend, unless such surrender was voluntarily made, and not as the result of adversary proceedings instituted by the assignee, and prosecuted to final judgment; citing numerous cases, and Bump on Bankruptcy. The evidence justified the court in holding that respondents acted in good faith in taking the draft, and without any intention of defrauding the other creditors. Shortly after the receiver brought his action, and some time before judgment, she surrendered all the money received by her, except $150, which the evidence tends to show she used for family purposes. In that action, however, the court gave judgment against her for this $150, reciting therein that she had turned over to the clerk the balance received by her. The court evidently, in view of the stipulations and notices already referred to, and probably in view of evidence at the trial of that action not now before us, acquitted respondent of all actual fraud in the matter, but held her liable under the insolvent act for constructive fraud alone as to the money appropriated by her. Having turned over the money to the clerk, and he to the assignee, some time before judgment, the court rightly, we think, held her entitled to share as a creditor in the dividends; first deducting from her share this $150. Respondent was entitled, under the circumstances, to avail herself of the locus poenitentiae at the time she did so, and she did not lose her right to share in the dividends because she contested the assignee's claim to the $150. We so understand the law, as stated by Mr. Bump at the page of this author's book referred to by appellant, and we find nothing to the contrary in the cases cited by appellant. In view of all the facts, we think the orders of the trial court were supported by the evidence. They certainly were fair and just, and we advise their affirmance.

We concur: HAYNES, C.; GRAY, C.

CLARKE v. POLICE LIFE & HEALTH INS. BOARD. (S. F. 1,478.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1900.)
MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POLICE FORCE—RETIREMENT—PENSIONS.

Act March 2, 1897, amending Act 1889, § 3, provides that where a person has served in the regularly constituted police department of a city and county subject to the provisions of the act relating to the police life and health insurance board for 20 years or more in the aggregate, such board may direct that, after becoming 60 years of age, he be retired on pension. Held, that where relator resigned from the police force of the city of San Francisco in 1887, after having served more than 20 years in the aggregate, the board not having any control over him at the time the act took effect, he was not entitled to a pension thereunder.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by Alfred Clarke against the Police Life & Health Insurance Board. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Clarke, in pro. per. H. T. Cresswell, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. The appellant filed his petition in the superior court for a writ of mandamus to the Police Life & Health Insurance Board, compelling that body to grant him a pension out of the fund arising under the provisions of the act of March 4, 1889, entitled "An act to create a police relief, health and life insurance and pension fund," etc. (St. 1889, p. 56). A general demurrer to his petition was sustained, and judgment passed in favor of the board. This is an appeal from the judgment, and the sole question to be determined is whether, on the facts stated in the petition, the appellant is, by the terms of the law, as amended March 2, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 52), entitled to a pension.

The petitioner was appointed and commenced his service on the police force of the city and county of San Francisco December 3, 1856. He continued to serve until September 1, 1868, when he was removed without cause. On the 1st of February, 1869, he was reappointed, and served continuously from that date until December 31, 1887, when the condition of his health compelled him to resign. Up to the date of appellant's resignation from the force the only law providing for the allowance of any pecuniary benefits to policemen, in addition to their salaries, was the act of April 1, 1878 (St. 1878, p. 879). Under the provision of that act the legal representative of a policeman dying in the service was to be paid the sum of $1,000, and to any policeman resigning on account of bad health or physical infirmity was to be paid the amount he had contributed to the "life and health insurance fund"; that is to say, he was to be paid $2 a month for the time he had been in service, that being the sum paid into the special fund from the general county funds, under the act of 1878, on account of every policeman on the rolls. As the petitioner resigned on account of ill health in 1887, while the act of 1878 was in force, it is to be presumed that he received the two dollars per month to which he was entitled, and that his claims upon the fund ended with his retirement from the force. More than a year after his resignation, the act of 1889 was passed, by which a new system was established, and the act of 1878 repealed. Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 22 Pac. 176; Id., 132 U. S. 470, 10 Sup. Ct. 149, 33 L. Ed. 426; Clarke v. Reis, 87 Cal. 543, 25 Pac. 759. By this act it was provided that pensions should be paid to policemen retired after 20 years' service. The petitioner makes no claim under this law as originally enacted. He seems to concede that he was not within its terms, because, and only because, his service had not been continuous for 20 years, though the aggregate of his two terms of service was 30 years. By the act of March 2, 1897, however, section 3 of the act of 1889 was amended so as to be read as follows: "Whenever any person, at the taking effect of this act or thereafter, shall have been duly appointed or selected, and sworn, and have served for twenty years, or more, in the aggregate, as a member in any capacity or any rank whatever, of the regularly constituted police department of any such county, city and county, city or town, which may hereafter be subject to the provisions of this act, said board may, if it see fit, order and direct that such person, after becoming sixty years of age, be retired from further service in such police department, and from the date of the making of such order the service of such person in such police department shall cease, and such person so retired shall thereafter, during his lifetime, be paid from such fund a yearly pension equal to one-half of the amount of salary attached to the rank which he may have held in said police department for the period of one year next preceding the date of such retirement." Under this amendment, providing for pensions to those whose service in the police department should extend in the aggregate to 20 years, petitioner claims his pension. We think it clear, from a reading of the amended section, that it has no application to one whose connection with the department was at an end before the passage of the amending act. It simply provides that in case of an officer, who is a member of the force, who is 60 years of age, and who has served 20 years in the aggregate, the board may, in its discretion, retire him on half pay, or retain him in active service at full pay. It does not apply to a person over whom the board has no power or authority whatever. The main portion of appellant's argument is directed to the alleged discrimination of the board in awarding pensions to others who, as he contends, are less deserving than himself, and no more clearly within the letter of the statute. It would make no difference, so far as this proceeding is concerned, whether this charge is true or not. The only question we are concerned with is whether, under the law, it is the duty of the board to allow a pension to the petitioner, and, since we have concluded that such is not their duty, it would not alter the result if it appeared that they had awarded pensions to others not entitled to receive them. In saying this we are not to be understood as intimating that the other pensions alluded to have been improperly allowed. Those questions are not before us for decision, and between all those cases and the present case there exists the important difference that the pensioners were in service at the date of their respective retirements and subsequent to the amendment of the act. The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS.

BALDWIN v. STATE. (Sac. 526.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1899.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county. Action by A. S. Baldwin against the state of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the State. J. D. Thornton and Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

MEAD v. STATE. (Sac. 527.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 28, 1899.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Sacramento county. Action by M. H. Mead against the state of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the State. J. D. Thornton and Freeman & Bates, for respondent.

MILLER et al. v. CARLISLE et al. (Sac. 560.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1899.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Butte county. Action by William T. Miller and others against J. O. Carlisle and others to enforce mechanics' liens. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Paul H. Boggs appeals. Reversed. Nicoll & Orr, for appellant. Warren Sexton, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is by the defendant Boggs from the personal judgment in the action, rendered against him and his co-defendant, Carlisle. The facts necessary to an understanding of the case are stated in the opinion rendered on the appeal (Sac. 584; 59 Pac. 785) from the order denying the motion of Carlisle for new trial. For the reasons there given, it appears that the court below had no jurisdiction to render the judgment appealed from. The judgment is also erroneous, in that it awards a recovery in favor of the plaintiffs jointly; their demands being several. It is therefore reversed.

PECK v. ADAMS et al. (S. F. 1,927.)¹ (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1899.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county. Action by M. Elizabeth Peck, as special administratrix, etc., against E. F. Adams and others. From an order allowing defendants' motion to dismiss the action, plaintiff appeals. Modified. J. F. Utter, J. J. Scrivner, and A. H. Cohen, for appellant. Jeter & McKinney and Chas. B. Younger, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The facts in this case are identical with the facts in the action by the same plaintiff against Agnew (S. F. 1,928; this day decided) 59 Pac. 125, except as to the description of the property involved in the suit. Upon the authority of that case the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the superior court is directed to modify the judgment as therein ordered.

PEOPLE v. SPENCER. (Cr. 567.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1899.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county. D. C. Spencer was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed. W. H. Shinn and S. V. Landt, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. This case is a companion case to People v. Campbell (Cr. 568) 59 Pac. 593. The parties were jointly charged, but were tried separately. The evidence was substantially the same, and, as the prosecution and defense were conducted by the same attorneys, the procedure and the exceptions are the same. The exception, if any, consists in the fact that the point is made on this appeal that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions asked for by the defendant. The instructions refused, so far as not substantially already given, are in support of the contention of the defendant that, if the prosecuting witness was induced to part with the possession of his money through the false personation by Campbell of Davies, then the crime of larceny was not shown. This point, though not raised as to instructions, was really decided in the Campbell Case, as were all others raised on this appeal. It was held that, although the facts would have justified a prosecution for false personation, still if, under the statute, the facts bring the case within the definition of larceny it may be prosecuted as such. On the authority of People v. Campbell the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS et al. (Cr. 533.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1899.) Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. One Azhderian was convicted of extortion, and he appeals from the judgment. Reversed. Frederick McGregor and Evans & Meredith, for appellant. Atty. Gen. Ford, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant Azhderian was jointly charged, tried, and convicted with the co-defendant, Elsie Williams, of the crime of extortion. He now prosecutes a separate appeal from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. The two appeals are here upon one transcript, and the grounds for the appeal are substantially the same in both cases. Upon the authority of the decision in the Williams Case (this day filed) 59 Pac. 581, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

In re SCOTT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 1,612.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 7, 1899.) In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco. In the matter of the estate of Kate Scott, deceased, an appeal was taken. Judgment on appeal set aside, and opinion withdrawn. D. C. Murphy, for appellant. E. Myron Wolf, H. Van Leuven, James P. Sweeney, and Jacob Samuels, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. An order having been made in department on November 6, 1899, setting aside a former submission of this cause and allowing respondents 20 days in which to file a brief, and an opinion which had been prepared before that time having been inadvertently filed on said November 6th, and judgment thereon having been inadvertently entered, now, therefore, it is ordered that said judgment be set aside, and said opinion withdrawn, and that the cause, upon the filing of respondents' brief, stand submitted in department 2.

SIEMSEN v. OAKLAND, S. L. & H. ELECTRIC RY. CO. (S. F. 1,679.) (Supreme Court of California. Feb. 12, 1900.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county. Action by W. Siemsen against the Oakland, San Leandro & Haywards Electric Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Motion to amend record granted. Fitzgerald & Abbott, for appellant. Sam Bell McKee (Chickering, Thomas & Gregory, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent having suggested a diminution of the record, and having made a motion to amend the same by adding thereto the affidavit of C. Gustafson, set forth in the motion, and the matter having been heretofore regularly heard and submitted, it is now ordered that said motion be granted, and that said affidavit of O. Gustafson be added to the record of this appeal, and constitute a part thereof.

WHITE v. HAYDEN. (L. A. 461.) (Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1899.) Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Kern county. Action by John W. White against B. A. Hayden. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. Cannon & Freeman and J. W. Ahern, for appellant. J. E. Patton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. As the relief sought by plaintiff in this action may be obtained in cause L. A. 460 (this day decided) 59 Pac. 118, the judgment in this cause is affirmed, without costs to either party.
